PREFACE TO SECOND EDITION.

SINCE the First Edition was published in 1908, the effect of the changes introduced by this Code has been interpreted by a great number of legal decisions. All these, up to August, 1914, have been considered in the text of this Edition or recorded in the footnotes; and some later cases of importance, up to May, 1915, have been added while it was in the Press. The Notifications and Rules made under the Code have been added in new Appendices, including those issued by the Government of India and the Local Governments, and by the High Courts of Calcutta, Madras, Bombay, Allahabad, the North-Western Provinces, the Punjab, and Burma.

Our thanks are due to the Registrars of the High Courts at Madras, Bombay, and Allahabad, and of the Chief Courts of Lower Burma, the Punjab, and the Revenue Secretary to the Government of Burma, for having supplied us with the valuable material in the Appendices, and to Babu Jyotish Chandra Mitra, Assistant Registrar of the Calcutta High Court, for having assisted in the collection and preparation of this material.

PREFACE TO FIRST EDITION.

THOUGH the preparation of this Commentary was commenced some five years ago when the former Code was in force, it has been since continued with reference to the various changes in the text of the Code which have been introduced from time to time. As therefore published it presents both the law as it now is and (where there has been an amendment) as it was, with an explanation of the reason and effect of the changes made. These changes in the text, even where, as is often the case, they are of a verbal character, have been indicated by the use of italics. Against each section and rule has been noted the corresponding section, if any, in the old Code, and a comparative table has been given showing the distribution of the provisions of the old Code in the present one.

The reported decisions have been noted up to and inclusive of the month of December, 1907.

In this country Procedure of all kinds is a fetish. An unnecessarily voluminous case-law is in the main concerned with it, and so it comes about that this Commentary contains some 9470 precedents, and yet more have been consulted than have been cited. The inclusion of these cases has made the book a bulky one. To those who are not acquainted with the subject this result may appear to be unnecessary in the case of a commentary on a new Act. But this is not so with the plan we set before ourselves. In the first place, a great deal which is unexpressed must be read into any Code. In some instances it is not exhaustive of the subject dealt with, either as not dealing with a particular matter at all or as incompletely dealing with it. An example of the latter alternative is to be found in the doctrine of res judicata, which, as a principle, is more extensive than the particular sections which recognize it. In other cases the terms employed need explanation, such as "cause of action," "jurisdiction," "illegality," "irregularity" and the like. In some instances the application of the rule stated requires to be shown, as in the case of the former section 244 (now 47), the revision section, formerly 622, now 115, and others. Secondly, though the whole Code has been rearranged owing to the adoption of the division into clauses and rules, the substance of it is, in the main, the same as that of the Act which preceded it. The Special Committee on this point in their report said--

"The Code of Civil Procedure of 1882 has been in force for twenty-five years, and the experience of those years has shown that the general lines on which it proceeds are sound. The matters in which it has proved defective are for the most part matters of detail." They further stated that, apart from the rearrangement of the Code by the separation of clauses and rules, they "had not introduced many changes of a radical character into the Code," and that they "had advisedly adhered as closely as possible to the existing language, the meaning of which is now well understood by Courts and practitioners." In other words, the Legislature has, after many invitations to enter upon untried courses, ultimately adopted a conservative position, limiting its amendments to what it deemed to be clearly necessary. By far, therefore, the greater number of decisions cited are directly relevant as having been given on those portions of the Code which have either not been changed, or, at any rate, not materially so. Nextly, even where the present Code amends the law in the sense of superseding previous judicial decisions, a reference to these is necessary in order to understand the new provisions which so supersede them. To appreciate the scope of an amendment it is necessary to know what led to it, why it was made, and what difficulties it was intended to remove. It is, lastly, not possible to provide for everything. The Legislature has wisely rejected the proposal to convert the Code into a Digest of the case-law—a law which is more extensive than the Acts around which it has grown. As, however, the new Code becomes the better understood, a reference to the earlier law which it supersedes will become less and less necessary.

It would, of course, have been possible, as it would have been a lighter task, to have noted selected decisions only. We, however, preferred to give as complete a record of the subject as possible, believing that we should do a greater service by endeavouring to disentangle the confusion of that Record than by following the other course. To master technicality one must be a master of it; a position which can only be obtained by a careful and thorough study of all materials available, whatever value may afterwards, and as a result of such consideration, be attributed to them. We have, however, not considered it necessary to deal with two portions of the Code as we have with the rest. These are O. XXXIV. and the Second Schedule containing the Arbitration Rules. The Order is, with some amendments, substantially a reproduction of former sections of the Transfer of Property Act relating to mortgages. These have been already sufficiently treated of in the able books of Dr. Rash Behary Ghose and Dr. Gour on the subject. The arbitration sections of the former Code have, with some slight alterations, been incorporated in the Second Schedule as a temporary measure only, the Legislature having expressed its intention of shortly dealing with the subject afresh in a separate Act. We have, therefore, in these circumstances, only recorded the cases decided since the date of the last edition of the late Mr. Justice O'Kinealy's Civil Procedure Code.

We have said that the Code is, to a large extent, what it was. At the same time it is to be noted that a considerable number of important amendments have been made which will be found explained in the Commentary. The chief merit of the new Code is that these amendments, and the general scheme of which they form a part, recognize principles which we think make for the effective administration of justice. In this country both the litigants and Courts are apt to attribute excessive importance to what is but the mint, the anise, and the cummin of the law. Procedure is not, as seems sometimes to be supposed, an end in itself, but merely the machinery by which the Court does its work. Nextly, as it is not possible to foresee every contingency which may arise, it is not possible to provide such a machinery as will be effective to meet every want. The terms of the law itself must therefore be flexible, and to the Judges should be given a wide discretion in its administration. Freedom of action, if given, will often enable them to deal justly with cases which the most skilfully constructed provision may fail to meet. The Legislature has recognized that it is not possible to frame a fixed and rigid Code in such a manner as to sufficiently meet the varying needs of an area so diversified as that to which the Code applies. The provisions as to rules enable such variations to be introduced as may be necessary. To the latter are relegated matters of mere machinery. As they now stand they continue substantially, though with important amendments, the former state of things. But the High Courts may add to or alter them as necessity requires. Those provisions only are retained in the body of the Code in which some degree of permanence and uniformity has been considered desirable. In the amendments introduced an endeavour has been made to state general rules of procedure rather than to provide in detail for every possible contingency. The Select Committee very rightly state that they hold it "to be a sound view that excessive elaboration of details of procedure tends to cramp the action of the Court, and in consequence to encourage technicalities." Limitations have in several instances been removed, such as those which existed on the scope of suits (the issues in which however, are to be clearly defined), the power of remand, powers in second appeal, and so forth. Technical objections to jurisdiction, misjoinder, and the like are sought to be discouraged, and greater powers of amendment are given. A wider discretion is given to the Judges, the Select Committee observing that "the principles of procedure are now so well understood that the Courts may be trusted to apply them intelligently in cases for which no provision may be made in terms." Stuart, C.J., once spoke of those "who refused to know anything about procedure beyond the letter of the Code itself" (5 A. 522). The present Code, on the other hand, recognizes in sect. 152 the inherent jurisdiction of the Court to do what is right where the Legislature has failed to make provision for any particular case which may arise. It will be no longer possible to say that the Court can do nothing, though justice requires it to do something simply because the Code is silent on, or there is no reported decision in which a Judge has had to deal with, the point raised. "Procedure," said Lord Penzance, "is but the machinery of the law after all—the channel and means whereby law is administered and justice reached. It strangely departs from its proper office when, in place of facilitating, it is permitted to obstruct and even extinguish legal rights, and is thus made to govern where it ought to subserve" (L. R. 4 App. Cas. 525). It will be well also to bear in mind the dicta of the Judicial Committee that they will look to the essential justice of the case without considering whether matters of form have been strictly attended to (2 M. I. A. 344), and that (6 M. I. A. 410, 411) it is of the utmost importance that the Courts of this country shall constantly bear in mind that by their very constitution they are to decide according to equity and good conscience, and that the substance and merits of the case are to be kept constantly in view.

ACT No. V. OF 1908.

PASSED BY THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL OF INDIA IN COUNCIL.

Received the assent of the Governor-General on the 21st March, 1908.

An Act to consolidate and amend the laws relating to the Procedure of the Courts of Civil Judicature.

Preamble.

WHEREAS it is expedient to consolidate and amend the laws relating to the procedure of the Courts of Civil Judicature; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Previous Legislation.—Up to the year 1862 the Courts in the Presidency Towns and in the Provinces were governed by different rules of procedure. The Supreme Courts were governed in matters of procedure by their own practice, rules and orders, and certain Acts.(1) The Provincial Courts were governed by Acts and Regulations particularly applicable to them.(2) In 1859 the first Code of Civil Procedure (Act VIII. of 1859) was passed, which enacted that where it came into operation the procedure of Civil Courts was to be regulated by it only.(3) This Act, however, was originally intended for application in the Courts not established by Royal Charter, and it was not till the year 1862 that it was extended to the Courts in the Presidency Towns. In that year the Supreme Courts and the Courts of Sudder Dewanny Adawlut in the three Presidency Towns were abolished. Letters Patent constituting the present High Courts were granted in pursuance of an Act of Parliament of the Session 1861, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 104. With the abolition of the Supreme Courts, their former procedure in civil cases between party and party was abolished, and by the 37th section of the Letters Patent establishing the High Court at Calcutta, and the corresponding sections of the Letters Patent establishing similar courts at Madras

(1) See Acts XVII. of 1852; VI. of 1854.

(2) See the Schedule to Act X. of 1861, which was passed to repeal certain Acts and Regulations relating to the procedure of Civil Courts not established by Royal Charter.

(3) See Act VIII. of 1859, s. 388.

and Bombay, the proceedings in civil suits between party and party brought in the High Courts, were to be regulated by Act VIII. of 1859, and by such further or other enactments of the Governor-General in Council, in relation to Civil Procedure, as were in force at the date of the several Charters: Provided always that the regulation of such proceedings respectively should be subject to such laws and regulations as should be thereafter made by the Governor-General in Council in relation to such proceedings. This was modified by the 37th sections of the new Charters of 1865, which run as follows: "And we do further ordain that it shall be lawful for the said High Court, &c., from time to time to make rules and orders for the purpose of regulating all proceedings in civil cases, which may be brought before the said High Court, including proceedings in its Admiralty, Vice-Admiralty, Intestate and Matrimonial Jurisdictions respectively: Provided always that the said High Court shall be guided in making such rules and orders, as far as possible, by the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, being an Act passed by the Governor-General in Council, and being Act No. VIII. of 1859, and the provisions of any law which has been made, amending or altering the same, by competent legislative authority."(1) Other Acts relating to the adoption of the Code of 1859 by the High Court are mentioned below.(2) The Acts passed after 1859, modifying and amending that Code, are given below.(3) In 1877 the second Code was enacted (Act X. of 1877). This very considerably amended and added to the Code of 1859. Whereas the latter contained 388 sections only, the former contained 652. This Code was followed by amending Acts,(4) and then by Act XIV. of 1882, which was also repealed in part and amended by subsequent Acts.(5)

The present Code repeals that of 1882, as also the amending Acts VII. of 1888; XII. of 1891; V. of 1894; XIII. of 1895. The chief feature of the present Code is the distinction drawn between matters dealt with by the Act, viz. those matters which affect more than one Province and matters in which it is essential that there should be uniformity in all Provinces and minor matters which are relegated to a schedule and treated as mere rules which may be varied or amended by the High Courts and Chief Courts. These rules are to a large extent sections of the Code of 1882, amended in certain parts and added to in others. As regards the body of the Act, the greater number of alterations perhaps occur in the provisions relating to execution, although other parts of the Code have been amended, and additions made thereto. The provisions relating to insolvency have been altogether removed from the Code, and now form the subject of a separate Act III. of 1907, which came into force on the 1st January, 1908.

Amended by Acts XV. of 1882, s. 3; VII. of 1887, s. 11; VI. of 1888, ss. 2-8; X. of 1888, ss. 1, 3; VIII. of 1890, s. 53; VI. of 1892, ss 2-4; V. of 1894; VII. of 1895, ss. 1, 2; XIII. of 1895.

"Consolidate and amend."—The Code is a consolidating Act. The method of construction to be adopted in the case of such a Code has been expounded by Lord Herschell (1) in terms which have been adopted by the Privy Council (2) and cited and applied in other cases in this country.(3) Dealing with the English Bills of Exchange Act, which was intended to be a Code of the Law relating to negotiable instruments, he said—

"I think the proper course is, in the first instance, to examine the language of the statute and to ask what is its natural meaning, uninfluenced by any consideration derived from the previous state of the law, and not to start with inquiring how the law previously stood, and then assuming that it was probably intended to leave it unaltered, to see if the words of the enactment will bear an interpretation in conformity with this view. If a statute intended to embody in a code a particular branch of the law is to be treated in this fashion, it appears to me that its utility will be almost entirely destroyed, and the very object with which it was enacted will be frustrated. The purpose of such a statute surely was that, on any point specifically dealt with by it, the law should be ascertained by interpreting the language used, instead of, as before, by roaming over a vast number of authorities in order to discover what the law was, extracting it by a minute critical examination of the prior decisions, dependent upon a knowledge of the exact effect even of an obsolete proceeding, such as a demurrer to evidence. I am, of course, far from asserting that recourse may never be had to the previous state of the law for the purpose of aiding in the construction of the provisions of the Code. If, for example, a provision be of doubtful import, such resort would be perfectly legitimate; or, again, if in a code of the law of negotiable instruments, words be found which have previously acquired a technical meaning, or been used in a sense other than their ordinary one, in relation to such instruments, the same interpretation might well be put upon them in the Code. I give these as examples merely; they, of course, do not exhaust the category. What, however, I am venturing to insist upon is that the first step taken should be to interpret the language of the statute, and that an appeal to earlier decisions can only be justified on some special ground."(4)

It has been said that a reference to the previous history of the law and legislation on the subject is one of the means by which a Court is entitled to seek assistance in construing an Act of the Legislature.(5) And the practice of the Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay High Courts has been to consider as aids towards construction the history of the transition of an Act through the Legislature and to refer to the Reports of Law Commissioners, Proceedings of the Legislative Council, Reports of Select Committees, Draft of Bills and

Statement of Objects and Reasons. The Privy Council have, however, in the case of the Administrator-General of Bengal v. Prem Lall Mullick,(1) observed upon the use of these means of interpretation, expressing their disapproval of the practice of referring to the proceedings of the Legislature which result in the passing of an Act. A large number of decisions exist upon this question, which is one of some difficulty.(2)

It is, no doubt, a well-established rule of construction that when the terms of an Act are clear and plain, it is the duty of the Court to give effect to them as they stand, according to their plain meaning, neither adding to, nor subtracting from them. The Legislature must be taken to have intended to mean what it has so plainly expressed, and when the terms of an Act admit of but one meaning a Court is not at liberty to speculate on the intent of the Legislature, or to construe them according to its own notions of the reasons supposed to have been the cause of its enactment.(3) The primary question, in short, is not what may be supposed to have been intended, but what has been said.(4) Where, however, an Act has been considered not to clearly express the intention of the Legislature, it has for some years been the practice of the Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay High Courts (5) to consider (as aids towards construction) : (A) The history of previous Legislation,(6) (B) and of the transition of an Act through the Legislature, viz.

(5) The Allahabad High Court held, on the other hand, in Kadir Baksh v. Bhawani Prosad, 14 A. 145 (1891), dissenting from R. v. Kartick Chunder Das, 14 C. 721, and Romesh Chunder Sangal v. Hiru Mondal, 17 C. 852, that in construing a statute the Court cannot refer to the statement of Objects and Reasons attached to a bill or to the report of a select committee, or to the debates of the Legislature, but can only look to the statute itself: and this rule as regards debates in Council was affirmed in Maharaj Tewari v. Har Charan, 26 A. 141, 147 (1903). It is, further, to be noted with regard to the Calcutta High Court that it was ruled, in 1862, by Sir M. Wells in Muddoosooden Dey v. Bama Churn Mookerjee, 1 Hyde, 100, that the meaning of an Act is to be gathered solely by reference to the Act itself and not to any official report of proceedings in the Legislative Council. These two cases are, therefore, in accord with the Privy Council case now considered. (Administrator-General of Bengal v. Prem Lall Mullick.)

(6) Prabhakarbhat v. Vishwambhar Pandit 8 B. 313 (1884) [held that the pre-existing state of law, as recognized by the Tribunals, is one of the chief means of interpretation]. In Fahamidnunissa Begum v. Secretary of State, 1886-1889, the High Court (14 C. 67), as well as the Privy Council (17 C. 590), fully reviewed the earlier legislation in order to determine upon the construction of Act IX. of 1847. Similarly the Allahabad Full Bench in R. v. Babu Lal, 6 A. 509 (1884), considered the provisions of English law and the repealed sections of the older Codes bearing upon ss. 24 and 27 of the Evidence Act, and the same Court, again in R. v. Ghulet, 7 A. 44 (1884), discussed the law as to alternative charges prior to the Penal Code. Sect. 132 of the Evidence Act was construed in R. v. Gopal Das, 3 M. 271 (1881), with reference to the previously existing state of the law on the point. And in the main case (Administrator-General v. Prem Lall Mullick), all the Judges in the High Court, including the dissentient Judge Petheram, C.J., referred to

(a) Reports of the Indian Law Commissioners ; (1)
(b) Proceedings of the Legislative Council ; (2)
(c) Reports of Select Committees of the Legislative Council.(3) (d) Draft stages of a bill, (4) and (e) Statements of Objects and Reasons,(5) attached to bills.

The question of the right to make use of these aids to construction came before the Privy Council in the case referred to. The Calcutta High Court in the previous and subsequent course of legislation in construing Act II. of 1874. See also R. v. Fischer, 14 M. 342 (1891), and numerous other cases.

Bankruptcy, 87 [where the Lord Chancellor referred to a Report of the Commissioners on Bankruptcy law], held that the Reports of Law Commissioners could be referred to in aid of the construction of a statute. In R. v. Ghulet, 7 A. 44 (1884), Duthoit, J., with the apparent approval of his colleague, Straight, J., referred to such reports. The admissibility of such reference was expressly ruled in Romesh Chunder Sanyal v. Hiru Mondal, 17 C. 852 (1890). However, in Tarack Nath Sircar v. Prosono Coomar Ghose, 19 W. R. 48, 53 (1873), Couch, C.J., said : "You cannot interpret Acts by Reports of Commissioners."

(2) Mathoora Kant Shaw v. India General S. N. But as to speeches of others upon a bill, it has been held by the Bombay High Court in Gopal Krishna Parachure v. Sakhojirav, 18 B. 133 (1894), that the debate on the bill, when before the Council, is not to be referred to. However, in Chunilal Panalal v. Bomanji Mancherji Modi, 7 B. 310, 315 (1883), Birdwood, J., referred to the speech not only of a member introducing a bill, but of a member speaking upon an amendment ; and see also Mahomed Jackariah v. Ahmed Mahomed, 15 C. 137 (1887). The Allahabad High Court, on the other hand, has held generally that the Courts cannot look to the debates of the Legislature : Kadir Baksh v. Bhawani Prasad, 14 A. 145 (1892) ; Maharaj Tewari v. Har Charan, 26 A. 144, 147 (1903) ; and see Goundu Pillai v. Thayammal, 14 M. L. J. 209 (1904).

The Allahabad High Court has, however, held to the contrary that these reports cannot be referred to : Kadir Baksh v. Bhawani Prasad, 14 A. 145 (1892).

(4) In R. v. Kartick Chunder Das, 14 C. 729 (1887), s. 22 of the Draft Bill on Evidence was referred to ; but in Shaik Moosa v. Shaik Essa, 8 B. 241 (1884), it was held that the Court could not look at the various forms in which a bill was brought before the Legislature.

(5) Fadhu Jhala v. Gour Mohun Jhala, 19 C. 545 (1892) ; Administrator-General v. Prem Lall Mullick, 21 C. 732 (1894) ; Shaik Moosa v. Shaik Essa, 8 B. 241 (1884). However, in Mathoora Kant Shaw v. India General S. N. Co., 10 C. 166 (1883), Prinsep, J., considered it unusual to refer to the Objects and Reasons, though he did in that case read an abstract from the Legal Member's speech containing the Objects and Reasons ; and in Kadir Baksh v. Bhawani Prosad, 14 A. 145 (1892), the Allahabad High Court held that the Objects and Reasons attached to a bill could not be referred to.

that case (The Administrator-General of Bengal v. Prem Lall Mullick), (1) in aid of the construction of Act II. of 1874, referred (a) to the course of legislation, (2) (b) the statement of the objects and reasons of the Act, (3) and (c) Report of the Select Committee.(4)

The Privy Council, before whom the case came in appeal,(5) held with regard to (a) that (i.) "a positive enactment in a statute of 1874 can not be qualified or neutralized by indications of intention gathered from previous legislation upon the same subject. And there is no legislation subsequent to that of 1874, with respect to the power of an executor to make over his office with all its rights and liabilities to the Administrator-General;" (6) and (ii.) that it is against reason and authority to maintain the proposition, "that in dealing with a Consolidating Statute, each enactment must be traced to its original source, and when that is discovered, must be construed according to the state of circumstances which existed when it first became law. The very object of consolidation is to collect the statutory law bearing upon a particular subject and to bring it down to date, in order that it may form a useful code applicable to the circumstances existing at the time when the Consolidating Act is passed." (7) With regard to (b) and (c), the Privy Council observed as follows:—(8) "The two learned Judges who constituted the majority in the Appellate Court, although they do not base their judgments upon them, refer to the proceedings of the Legislature which resulted in the passing of the Act of 1874, as legitimate aids to the construction of sect. 31. Their Lordships think it right to express their dissent from that proposition. The same reasons which exclude these considerations when the clauses of an Act of the British Legislature are under construction are equally cogent in the case of an Indian Statute."

The question next to be considered is how far, if at all, does this decision of the Privy Council affect the practice of the Indian Courts to which reference has been made. The result of their Lordships' decision appears to be as follows:—

(i.) Pre-existing legislation may still be referred to as an aid towards construction,(9) subject to this that (a) if the terms of an Act are clear, positive, and express, they cannot be modified or neutralized by indications of intention to be gathered from previous legislation upon the same subject; (b) that in the case of a Consolidating Act, it must be construed not with reference to the circumstances existing at the time of the preceding Acts but in relation to those existing at the time of the Consolidating Act.(10) This last dictum, it is conceived,

(1) 21 C. 732 (1894). In this case, Petheram, C.J., however, stated that in his opinion the history of the Act II. of 1874, was inadmissible to explain it, and that the Court ought not to consider what was the intention of the members of Council by whom it was introduced: ib., at p. 753. Trevelyan, J., also expressed a doubt on this point, ib., 775.

(10) See also per Lord Halsbury in Bank of England v. Vagliano Brothers, L. R. (1891) App. Cas. 107, 120. Nor is it an answer to the direct provisions of a particular section of an enactment to say that the enactment was described in terms as an enactment to consolidate, amend, and define the provisions of previously existing laws, and that the par-refers to cases where the two sets of circumstances differ.(1) In all cases, however, the proper course is in the first instance to examine the language of the Act, uninfluenced by considerations as to the previous state of the law, and to resort to a consideration of the latter only if the meaning of the Act itself be not clear.

(ii.) Reports of the Indian Law Commissioners.—These were not referred to in the lower Court, and the Privy Council have said nothing directly as to their use. They have, however, indicated that the law in these matters should be the same as that which prevails in England, and according to this test reference is permissible. See Lord Westbury's view in the case of In re Mew, cited ante, p. 5, n. (1). In the case of Chuni Lal Mancharam v. Manishankar Atmaram,(2) the Bombay High Court in dealing with the Easements Act referred to the recommendations of the Law Commission.

(iii.) Proceedings of the Legislative Council.—Upon a reference to some of the terms of the Privy Council judgment, it would seem that reference to these is not now permissible. But in the case of In re Mew,(3) the Lord Chancellor read a speech made in the House of Commons by the member who introduced the Bankruptcy Bill of 1860. The Privy Council itself also in Hebbert v. Purchas,(4) referred to the Commons' and Lords' Journals, and to the details of a conference between the two Houses of Parliament. And in the Queen v. Bishop of Oxford,(5) Bramwell, J., read passages from the Lord Chancellor's Speech made in the House of Lords upon the Church Discipline Act. The Bombay High Court has, however, since held that it is not permissible to refer to the speech of the Legal Member of the Indian Legislative Council when proposing the enactment of a bill.(6)

(iv.) Reports of Select Committees of the Legislative Council.—These were referred to by the High Court in The Administrator-General v. Prem Lall Mullick. The Privy Council must, therefore, it seems, be taken to have disapproved of the reference to those reports, though reverting again to the English rule upon which the Privy Council rested their judgment, it appears that Sir George Turner, L.J., in Drummond v. Drummond,(7) referred to the proceedings of a Select Committee of which he had been a member. In the case of Assam v. Pathumma (8) the Madras High Court referred to the report of a Select Committee.

(v.) Draft Stages of a Bill.—These were not referred to in the principal case either in the judgments of the High Court or Privy Council. But they appear to fall within the principle of exclusion laid down by the latter, and ticular rule contended for is not to be found among the previously existing laws. It is sufficient if the provision relied upon is a part of the Act, whatever the description of the purposes of the Act may be. Daimoddee Paik v. Kalim Tarafdar, 5 C. 300, 303 (1879).

(1) In the cases of In re Mew, 31, L. J. Bankruptcy, 87, a Consolidating Act was construed with reference to circumstances existing at the time of the earlier Act, where, however, the circumstances had not changed (as it had in the Privy Council case) at the time of the latter Act. See observations in Mad. L. J., supra, 289, 290.

there is but little authority to be found for their use. In Chuni Lal Mancharan v. Manishankar Atmaran (1) the Court referred to the Drafts of the Easements Bills of 1879 and 1881, as also to the opinions of the draftsman of the first-mentioned bill.

(vi.) Statements of Objects and Reasons. - These were referred to by the High Court in the principal case, and the Privy Council must, therefore, it seems, be taken to have disapproved of their use. The attachment of a statement of objects and reasons to a bill being a procedure peculiar to this country, there is no English authority upon the point. The preamble of an Act, which may be referred to, affords the nearest analogy. But if there be any grounds for the admission of reports of Select Committees or proceedings of the Legislative Council, it certainly seems that strong grounds also exist for the admissibility of these statements. In the case of the Delhi and London Bank v. Hem Lall Dutt,(2) Trevelyan, J., referred to the Objects and Reasons of the Easements Act, for the purpose of seeing what was the law at the time, and in the case of Chuni Lal Mancharam v. Manishankar Atmaran,(3) Candy, J., also referred to the statement of Objects and Reasons.

The Privy Council decision has been shortly referred to by the Calcutta High Court in the case of the Queen-Empress v. Sri Churn Chungo,(4) where Pigot, J. (Prinsep and Macpherson, JJ., concurring), said: "We do not propose to consider the history of the Penal Code from its original draft by Lord Macaulay in 1840, to its becoming law in 1860. Their Lordships of the Privy Council, in the recent case of the Administrator-General of Bengal v. Prem Lall Mullick, have held that it is not competent to refer to proceedings of the Legislature as legitimate aids to the construction of a law." This decision of the Privy Council was also referred to by the Bombay High Court in R. v. Gangadhar Tilak,(5) in which it was broadly stated that it is inadmissible to take as an aid in construing an Act the proceedings in the Legislative Council, which resulted in the passing of that Act.

In any case, and whether or not admissible to construe the Acts to which they relate, the Acts of the Legislature are instructive historically, if one has to consider not what the statute says, but what may have been the motives of one or other party in promoting the legislation.(6) And there is but little doubt that there will be a continued reference to such Acts, if not as technical at any rate as private, aids towards the comprehension of the intention of the Legislature.

The primary question in each case is, of course, What are the facts? It is, however, a common fault in this country to disregard the facts of a case in favour of authorities.(7)

The next question is, What are the words of the Code itself?

The Act must be taken as one continuous Code, the different sections being simultaneously enacted in view of each other.(1) The Court must be governed by the language of the Legislature without considering what may have been its intention, if the words themselves are clear.(2) Its limited function is not to say what the Legislature meant, but to ascertain what the Legislature has said that it meant.(3) It is always dangerous to paraphrase an enactment, and not the less so if the enactment is perhaps not altogether happily expressed.(4) Where the Code contains provisions upon a particular question, it must be tested, not by general principles but by the expressions of the Code which relate to that question.(5) Where two procedures or two remedies are provided, one of them must not be taken as operating in derogation of the other.(6) In many cases reference has to be made to judicial precedent. For it is a principle peculiar to the English Common Law (7) that a decided case has an authoritative and binding force and is, subject to certain well-known limitations, to be followed in other similar cases. It is, however, an unfortunate circumstance that the greater bulk of the reported Indian cases deal with questions of adjective law; unfortunate because a great divergency of opinion, such as exists touching the interpretation of rules of procedure, limitation, stamp or registration, is to be avoided, involving, as it does, uncertainty in the administration of justice and an encouragement of appeals, which in many cases are due to the hope entertained of overturning the judgments of the lower Courts, not upon the merits, but upon some technicality or other.(8)

In this country the use of judicial precedent frequently leads to abuse.

Every case is independent of every other, and no decision upon facts forms a precedent for any other decision. And every judgment must be read as applicable to the particular facts proved or assumed to be proved, since the generality of the expressions which may be found there are not intended to be expositions of the whole law, but governed and qualified by the particular facts of the case in which such expressions are found. A case is only an authority for what it actually decides. It cannot be quoted for a proposition that may seem to follow logically from it.(9) "The only use of authorities or decided cases is the establishment of some principle which the Judge can follow out in deciding the case before him."(1) Lord Mansfield, C.J., said, "It certainly is very hard upon a Judge if a rule which he generally lays down is to be taken up and carried to its full extent. This is sometimes done by counsel, who have nothing else to rely upon; but great caution ought to be used by the Court in extending such maxims to cases which the Judge who uttered them never had in contemplation. If such is the use to be made of them, I ought to be very cautious how I lay down general maxims from the Bench."(2)

It is well to bear the remarks cited in the last paragraph in mind, though, of course, the nature of procedure law does not always admit of their application. In many cases the rules are of an artificial and arbitrary character, though in others, such as those dealing with bar by judgment or by suit and the like, questions of principle are widely involved.

As Holloway, J., said, the application to practical life of sound principles presents no more difficulty than that of empirical maxims (or, we may add, case law), based mainly upon a misunderstanding (or lack of understanding) of the great practical jurists, whom all admit to be the only guides.(3)

In questions of procedure it is generally important that there should be uniformity of decision, and that existing practice should not be upset,(4) for

Mr. Ramanathan, K.C., in his speech on behalf of the Ceylon Bar upon the news of the death of Sir John Phear, late Chief Justice of Ceylon, said: "The so-called 'uncertainty of the law' is nothing more than the uncertainty of ill-trained Judges as to the true facts of the case and the proper principles of law applicable to it. He (Sir John Phear) made the Bar argue cases upon first principles of law. Before his advent legal principles were of little avail in the determination of a case unless supported by a judgment of a competent Court here or in England. If in arguing an advocate cited a decided case without going into first principles he would say, 'I don't want authorities. Let us solve this case even as a mathematician would solve a problem by applying the axioms and propositions we have learned in our books.' If they passed on to authorities too speedily he would say, 'We do not want authorities just yet; they are only of corroborative value. Let us solve the question by the proper application of first principles and then look into authorities to discover whether our conclusions on first principles are corroborated by them.' In this way first principles became paramount" (Ceylon Court, April 10, 1905; cor. Sir Charles Layard, C.J., and Moncrieff, J.).

The rule (as to substituted service) has already been construed by Huddlestone, B., in accordance with what seems to have been the general understanding of the Judges in Chambers, and it is very important that there should be uniformity of decision." And see per Edge, C.J., in Sheo. Prasad v. Lalit Kuar, 18 A. at p. 409: "Settled principles of law administered by a Court of Justice ought not to be lightly dis-in such cases it is often not so much the nature of the rule as the fact that there is a fixed rule which really matters. In Sadasiva Pillai v. Ramalinga Pillai,(1) the Privy Council said: "The alleged consensus of the Indian Courts being thus established, their Lordships, whatever their opinion upon the construction of this clause might have been, had the question been res integra, do not think it would be right to run counter to so long a course of decision upon what is in fact merely a question of procedure, it being admitted that the plaintiff may assert rights of this nature, if they exist, in a separate suit."

"It is the duty of a Judge not to declare what he considers the law ought to be, but to decide what, according to the best of his judgment, he finds it is; and if he finds a principle laid down upon competent authority it is far better to accept and apply it broadly and honestly, even if he is not in his own mind satisfied with the foundation of the rule, than to attempt to fritter it away in its application to cases which manifestly come within it."(2) The reasons, however, which Judges have assigned for their opinions have not the same degree of authority as the decisions themselves.(3) As regards these, if two cases are not to be reconciled, the authority which is at once the more recent and the more consistent with general principles ought to prevail.(4) As already stated, if a principle is laid down upon competent authority it is far better to accept and apply it broadly and honestly, even if the Judge is not in his own mind satisfied with the foundation of the rule, than to attempt to fritter it away in its application to cases which manifestly come within it.(5) The same rule applies when dealing with the provisions of the Code itself. "We ought not," said Sir Barnes Peacock, C.J., "to fritter away the law by construing words according to a mere technical sense instead of giving them a broad meaning so as to embrace all cases intended by the Legislature to be provided for."(6)

The Courts here must be guided in the first place by the terms of the Code itself, and, secondly, by those decisions of the Indian Courts which interpret the Code and which are binding on them. The Subordinate Courts are bound to follow the rulings of the High Courts, to which they are subject, where there are different rulings of different High Courts,(7) and in the absence of such ruling will do well in following the decisions, if any, of other High Courts and Chief Courts in India. As regards the High Courts themselves, Norris, J., sitting on the Original Side of the Court, said, with reference to a decision of an Appellate Bench of the same Court, that though he was not prepared to say that he should consider every judgment of an Appellate Bench binding upon him when sitting on the Original Side, yet every such judgment should receive respectful consideration and careful attention and should be followed, unless the Court was very clearly of opinion that the conclusion arrived at was an erroneous one.(1) As regards Appellate Benches, all are bound by decisions of the Privy Council and by Full Benches of the same Court, and if one Appellate Bench differs from a previous decision given by another the matter must be referred for determination of a Full Bench.(2) The High Court is, however, not bound by, though it will give respectful consideration to, the decisions of another High Court. As regards other countries, reference may be made to English case law, when in point, as also to the decisions of those countries such as the United States,(3) whose law is derived from a common source with our own. As regards, however, the decisions of the United States Courts, citation should not be generally approved unless where it is shown to be necessary by reason of the novelty of the point involved and the want of Indian or English precedents.(4) As regards these latter it has, no doubt, been said that "the Code of Civil Procedure does not prevail in England, and we must interpret its terms as best we may without reference to English cases."(5) It is, however, submitted with all respect that this is neither a correct nor useful view of the matter. The Courts in this country can ill afford to disregard the results of the learning and experience of the English Judges. And for the most part they have been glad to avail themselves of both. This has been where either general legal principles are involved—principles of common application in all countries, or in those in which English notions of jurisprudence prevail—or in cases where similar provisions to those prevailing here exist elsewhere, as in the case of many sections of the Code which are based upon or taken from the English rules under the Judicature Act. Where it was argued that an English decision had no application to India, the Privy Council said, that though that case would not be binding as an authority upon a Court in India not administering English law, their Lordships were far from holding that, decided as it was on the application of a maxim expressing a principle recognized by the laws of all civilized countries, it did not afford a rule applicable to circumstances of the same character in India.(1) So also, West, J., in delivering the judgment of the Full Bench,(2) dealing with a question arising under sect. 622 of the former Code, said: "In such a conflict of opinions as has arisen on the subject we are now considering, it may be useful to see how similar questions have been dealt with by the Courts in England. Their decisions can, of course, only afford analogies, not precedents, for Courts so differently constituted as those in India; but these analogies point to principles of general application, and thus repay our attentive consideration." As already stated, many of the provisions of the Code are taken from the English Rules and Orders, and there is no reason why the decisions given on those Rules and Orders should not be applicable here, or on such portions of them as are of equal application in this country and in England. Where a principle declared in an English decision does not depend on any peculiarity in English law it may be applicable here.(3) Again, where a Colonial Legislature has passed an Act in the same terms as an Imperial Statute, and the latter has been authoritatively construed by a Court of Appeal in England, such construction should be adopted by the Courts of the Colony,(4) though, of course, when the Indian Legislature has rejected or declined to follow the law of England upon a particular point the case is altogether different.(5)

It cannot, however, be too much insisted upon that procedure is mere machinery. Its rules should be observed; but it is to be remembered that these rules exist to enable the Courts, in a settled and convenient manner, to dispense justice. Mere technicality is to be avoided therefore as much as possible. This does not mean that the provisions of the Code are to be disregarded, but they are to be construed liberally, and if found to have been infringed it must be seen whether such infringement has affected the jurisdiction of the Court or the merits of the case.(6) Courts of law should be especially careful in dealing with technical objections to see what effect their decision will have in defeating substantial justice.(7) The Court may, however, find itself constrained to set aside an order on a ground which has unfortunately no relation to the merits of the case, as for want of jurisdiction, even though no objection has been taken by the parties.(1) So in the case now cited,(2) the Privy Council said: "This objection to the award was apparently not brought to the notice either of the Subordinate Judge or of the High Court. But the statute is there, and the Judges were bound to take judicial notice of it." And the Court is bound to take judicial notice of a change in the Statutory Law while a suit is pending, and a party is not estopped from calling attention to it, since the Court is taken to have known it.(3) And though it is exceedingly undesirable that any suit should fail on account of any technical objection, such, for instance, as that of misjoinder, at the same time when the objection is raised at the earliest opportunity, and when serious inconvenience and expense are likely to be caused to the parties, it is impossible for the Courts not to adjudicate upon the objection, and to relieve the parties from it.(4) Rules of procedure are, however, mere machinery; the means by which the Courts are enabled to dispense the justice for which they exist. As the Privy Council have said, it is of the utmost importance to the right administration of justice in the Courts of this country that it should be constantly borne in mind by them that by their very constitution they are to decide according to equity and good conscience, and that the substance and merits of the case are to be kept constantly in view.(5) Again, Lord Penzance said: (6) "Procedure is but the machinery of the law after all—the channel and means whereby law is administered and justice reached. It strangely departs from its proper office when, in place of facilitating, it is permitted to obstruct, and even extinguish, legal rights, and is thus made to govern where it ought to subserve."

The Code is not exhaustive.—The Code is not exhaustive. It is not uncommonly thought that it is sufficient to defeat an application or to reverse an order that no particular section of the Code can be cited as an authority for it. It is true that Strachey, C.J.,(7) stated that the Code contained the whole law of Civil Procedure. We are not, however, aware of any other authority to this effect, and that observation was not adopted by Banerjee, J., in the same case, and both in earlier and later cases in the same Court it was held that the Code was not exhaustive.(8) The latter view, it is submitted, is undoubtedly the correct one, and is supported by numerous cases to which reference will be made. Indeed, in one of these, Mahmood, J., said: (9) "I may therefore at the outset state that, according to my view of the rules of construction applicable to statutes like the Civil Procedure Code, the Courts are not to act upon the principle that every procedure is to be taken as prohibited, unless it is expressly provided for by the Code, but on the converse principle that every procedure is to be understood as permissible till it is shown to be prohibited by the law. As a matter of general principle, prohibitions cannot be presumed, and in the present case, therefore, it rests upon the defendants to show that the suit in the form in which it has been brought is prohibited by the rules of procedure applicable to the Courts of Justice in India."(1) This statement, if it is not to be liable to misconception, is in need of explanation and qualification. It is not to be supposed that it was intended to warrant any and every rule of procedure which a Court may arbitrarily choose to devise or to follow. It has been already pointed out (2) that the Code is exhaustive on the matters in respect of which it declares the law; that is, on any point specifically dealt with by it, the law must be ascertained by reference to its provisions. The Code, however, is not exhaustive in the sense that, for instance, the Evidence Act has been said to be, the second section of which, it has been held, in effect, prohibits the introduction of any kind of evidence not specifically authorized by the Act itself. The Code binds the Court so far as it goes.(3) If it prescribes a particular course in a particular case, that course must be taken. If, on the other hand, as in the case of the former section 561 (now omitted), it contains an express prohibition, the latter must be given effect to. Many matters are dealt with under a settled practice.(4) But even such a practice, however inveterate, cannot be legal if it is contrary to an express enactment or is inconsistent with it.(5) It was, however, pointed out by Wilson, J., in the case cited.(6) that if the Court had power before the introduction of the Code to make an order, and that power is not expressly taken away by the Code, it must remain.(1) So it was held in that case, that although Chapter XXVI. of the former Code only provided for suits to be brought by a pauper, the Court had yet power to allow a defendant to defend in formâ pauperis. So also in a case (2) which dealt with the inquiry into the question of minority, where a suit was brought by a person professing himself to be adult, but denied to be such by the defendant, upon which an issue was raised for trial, the Court pointed out that sect. 442 of the former Code did not apply to the case, which was not provided for by the Code. It however referred to the practice which prevailed before the Code was passed, and held that that practice had not been abrogated by any provision in the Code, and must be considered to be in force.(3) As regards, therefore, matters not specifically dealt with by the Code, the Courts are empowered to act under and according to their original powers and practice. Cases may, however, arise for which no provision can be found, either in the Code or in previous enactments or practice. As the Code does not affect previously existing powers expressly given and acted upon, neither does it affect the power and duty of the Court to act according to the well-known rule (governing alike the rules of substantive and adjective law (4)) in cases where no specific enactment exists, according to justice, equity, and good conscience. The Court has therefore in many cases, where the circumstances require it, acted upon the assumption of the possession of an inherent power to do that justice for the administration of which it alone exists.(5) So it has been held that or to restore to its files any case which the Court has itself removed therefrom undetermined, as where a case has been struck off under a misapprehension that the parties had settled it.(1) It has been held that if sect. 206 of that Code did not apply, the Court exercising appellate jurisdiction had an inherent jurisdiction to bring its decrees into accordance with its judgments,(2) and that although sect. 463 of that Code applied only to cases where persons have been adjudged lunatics under the statute, and was silent as to persons not so adjudged, the Court would, in the interest of justice (the provisions of Chapter XXXI. of the former Code not being exhaustive), appoint guardians ad litem of such persons, and allow them to sue by next friends.(3) A Court has inherent jurisdiction to amend the plaint and decree,(4) and to allow a set-off of costs against purchase-money in a case not provided for by sect. 211 of that Code.(5) So also it was held that though there was no special provision in the Code enabling the Court to refuse, on the ground of fraud, to confirm a sale, such as there was in the case of irregularity, neither was there any provision declaring that the Court should not have such a power; that there was no necessity for any special provision, and that if a Court were powerless to repress fraud, and was bound to ratify it, "equity and good conscience," the leading principles of administration of the law, are violated, and the Court had inherent jurisdiction to refuse to confirm the sale.(6) The Court has an inherent power to prevent an abuse of its processes, and is competent to reverse an order made in the absence of the opposite party without service of notice upon him, and which the law directs should be served.(7)

What has been said applies generally. Other questions arise in regard to the original side of the High Court, which has inherited all the jurisdiction and powers of the Supreme Court.(8) It has been held that the powers of the High Court in its original Civil Jurisdiction are not limited in all cases to those given by the Code, and in many respects its procedure is peculiar to itself.(9)

These instances (and there are doubtless others) are sufficient to show, firstly, that the Code is not exhaustive, there being matters with which it does not deal, and that in such cases the Court will, in the absence of any other express provision, exercise that inherent jurisdiction to do such justice between the parties as the nature of the case requires. There are, however, cases in which a question may arise whether the exercise of a power or the right to make an application is derived entirely from express legislation. So the right of appeal must be given by the enacted law, or equivalent authority,(1) and it has been debated whether a question of costs is one of procedure or one affecting vested rights,(2) in which case it was held that the power to award costs was derived entirely from Acts of the Legislature. As pointed out, however, by Sir Barnes Peacock, C.J., the laws cannot make express provision against all inconveniences, so that their dispositions shall express all the cases that may possibly happen; and it is therefore the duty of a Judge to apply them, not only to what appears to be regulated by their express provisions, but to all the cases to which a just application of them may be made, and which appear to be comprehended either within the express sense of the law, or within the consequences that may be gathered from it.(3) So, as is well known, sects. 11-14 (formerly 13 and 14), of the Code do not embody the entire rule of res judicata, which as a principle exists independently of the statute enacting it; and indeed, even as regards sect. 13 itself (now sect. 11), it has been said that it cannot be applied too literally.(4) The principle has therefore been applied to cases with which the Code does not expressly deal.(5) In the undermentioned case,(6) Blair, J., said that there are cases of misfeasance grosser than anything provided for in the Code, and that he declined to believe that those are cases where a High Court must fold its hands and allow obvious injustice to be done. At the same time, it is well to bear in mind the observations of Sir John Edge, C.J., adopted by Sir John Stanley, C.J.: "Justice, equity, and good conscience," he said, "are captivating terms, and before a Judge applies what may appear to him at first sight to be in accordance with justice, equity, and good conscience, he must be careful to see that his views are based on sound general principles and are not in conflict with the intentions of the Legislature, or with sound principles recognized by authority; (1) as also what was said by West, J., that the High Court, whose special function it was to curb any illegal excess of authority in others, must sedulously guard against such excess in itself, and resist the temptation which in some cases exists to transgress the proper limits of its authority."(2) The equity to be followed in the Courts of this country is natural equity or fairness, and is not affected by the particular meaning given to that word in English Law.(3)

It has been already pointed out that the jurisdiction to act in cases for which the Code has made no provision, rests upon the nature of the constitution of the Courts themselves and of the statutory rule,(4) enjoining them, in cases where no specific rule exists, to act according to justice, equity, and good conscience.(5) Vague notions are sometimes found to prevail with reference to clause 15 of the High Court Charter Act, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 104, which, however, has nothing to do with the matter now under discussion. This clause affects the High Courts only. To these it gives the power of superintendence over subordinate Courts. This power comes under the head of the appellate jurisdiction of the High Courts.(6) Under clause 21 of the Letters Patent, the law, equity and rule of good conscience to be applied by the High Court in the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction is the law, equity and rule which the Court in which the proceedings were originally instituted ought to have applied to the case. The proceedings therefore of a subordinate Court are revised under sect. 115 (formerly 622), or superintended under clause 15 on the ground that such Court did not comply with the law which governs it. In such cases, therefore, it is necessary to ascertain, firstly, what the law is which governed the subordinate Court in the proceedings complained of, and, secondly, to determine whether that law has been given effect to. It is obvious that a superior Court exercises jurisdiction under clause 15 or sect. 115 (formerly 622), only when the Court below has done wrong. Neither provisions apply when the Court below has done right—that is, has acted according to the law which controls it. If a subordinate Court declines jurisdiction because there is no section of the Code which empowers it to act, the High Court must determine whether it had an inherent jurisdiction or not in the matter. If it had, then the High Court interferes because the subordinate Court was bound to act according to justice, equity, and good conscience. The subordinate Court has jurisdiction, but declines to exercise it. On this the High Court interferes and compels the subordinate Court to exercise the inherent jurisdiction it has. Clause 15 does not enable the High Court to say, "It is quite true that the lower Court had no power to make the order; but we will." The power given by clause 15 is not an original but a superintending power. It assumes that the subordinate Court had jurisdiction but has wrongly declined to exercise it. If the subordinate Court had jurisdiction, it is because of the inherent power and duties cast upon it by the rule which binds it to act in all cases where no specific provision exists according to equity, justice, and good conscience. It has been recently held that proceedings on applications for enhancement of rent under sect. 27 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act (Beng. VI. of 1908) are judicial proceedings, and the Deputy Commissioners in performance of their duties under that Act are Courts subject to the appellate jurisdiction of the High Court, which has jurisdiction to interfere when the Courts of Collectors have either exceeded, or failed or refused to exercise, the jurisdiction vested in them by that Act.(1)

Inherent jurisdiction.—The inherent jurisdiction of the Court to which reference has been made in the last paragraph has now been expressly recognized in sect. 151 of the present Code.

"The laws."—In the under-mentioned case,(2) Stuart, C.J., speaking of this expression as occurring in the Preamble of the preceding Code, observed that it meant all the laws in operation at the time of the passing of the Code, including the General Clauses Act of 1868; but, as has been pointed out,(3) this is not correct, as the expression must be used with the words "relating to the procedure," etc., and the General Clauses Act cannot be deemed a law "relating to the procedure of the Courts of Civil Judicature."

"Courts of Civil Judicature."—Subject to what is hereinafter stated, the Preamble shows that the Code applies to all Courts of Civil Judicature. Its provisions will therefore govern the procedure of all Civil Courts in British India, subject to the provisions contained in this preliminary portion of the Code, and to any other special Act providing a special procedure for proceedings under it. The general power to entertain suits of a Civil nature except suits of which cognizance is barred by any enactment does not include a general power to make declarations.(4) The Act applies to suits in the ordinary civil jurisdiction. As to other cases, see the following paragraphs:—

Judges of the High Court (called the Commissioner in Insolvency), and the High Court and any such Judge thereof shall have and exercise within the Bengal Division of the Presidency of Fort William, and the Presidency of Madras and Bombay respectively, such powers and authorities with respect to original and appellate jurisdiction and otherwise as are constituted by the laws relating to insolvent debtors in India. The Insolvent Court in the Presidency Towns is constituted by a separate Act of Parliament. It is a Civil Court existing for the purpose of giving relief to persons unable to pay their debts. By the Royal Charter Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 104), upon the establishment of the High Courts the Supreme Courts were abolished. In 1862 and 1865 Letters Patent were granted. The Insolvent Court was not then merged in the High Court, but continued in existence side by side with the High Court. The appeal to the Supreme Court (Insolvent Act, sect. 73), and the power to make rules (ib. sect. 76), were transferred to the High Court.(1) But though the Insolvent Court is a separate tribunal from the High Court, it nevertheless stands in such a special relation to the High Court that a limitation or exclusion of the latter's jurisdiction may indirectly limit or exclude its own.(2) Sect. 5 of the Insolvent Act gives the jurisdiction, which is that of the Supreme Court. Sect. 18 of the Letters Patent declares the jurisdiction to be that constituted by the laws relating to Insolvent Debtors in India. But under clause 44 of the Letters Patent this is subject to the Legislative powers of the Indian Government. Therefore when Act V. of 1872 declared that the High Court at Bombay had no jurisdiction in Sind, it was held that the petition must be dismissed, though the Insolvent was a European British subject.(3) But the Supreme Court's jurisdiction was twofold local as regards the inhabitants of the cities and personal as regards European British subjects residing in any part of the territories subject to the Presidency Governments. So it was held that an European British subject residing in the Bombay Presidency, but outside the local limits of the High Court's jurisdiction, was entitled to petition; (4) and that though the personal jurisdiction did not now exist as regards civil actions, it had not been interfered with as regards the Insolvent Court. This would appear also to have been the view of Peacock, C.J.,(5) but not of Markby, J.,(6) though in the latter case the actual decision was that the jurisdiction of the Insolvent Court was limited to the Bengal Division of the Presidency of Fort William, that is Bengal proper, the petitioner's permanent residence being in the North Western Provinces.

The Insolvent Court is a Civil Court, its proceedings are civil proceedings and (as was apparent from Chapter XX. of the former Code now repealed) its procedure is Civil Procedure. But under sect. 120, nothing in this Code extends or applies to any Judge of a High Court in the exercise of jurisdiction as an Insolvent Court.(1) Orders in insolvency are not orders under the Code of Civil Procedure. They are orders under a special law, but they are under a special law in which different procedure is provided.(2) Execution is not taken out from this Court as it has no machinery for the purpose. Formerly the Insolvent Court availed itself of the machinery of the Supreme Court as auxiliary to its own. Subject to the provisions of the Charter Act and Letters Patent, the High Court exercises the same jurisdiction, took over all the work, and inherited all the powers that vested in the Supreme Court, whose jurisdiction it superseded. The Insolvency Act, however, has nothing to do with procedure in execution, which is governed by the Civil Procedure Code.(3) So although the Insolvent Court determines the substance of the questions relating to the insolvent's estate, the proceedings in execution and the judgment are the High Court's. Thus a judgment entered up under sect. 86 of the Insolvent Act, in the name of the Official Assignee against the insolvent, is entered up in the ordinary jurisdiction of the High Court.(4) The Provincial Insolvency Act does not interfere with any right of appeal to the Privy Council which may otherwise exist.(5)

(b) Admiralty jurisdiction. -The rules regulating Admiralty practice were framed when the Code of 1859 was in force. Rule 54 directs that proceedings not provided for by the rules shall be regulated by the rules and practice of the High Court in suits brought in it in the exercise of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction. The Code applies to proceedings on the Admiralty side of the High Court; sect. 645A of the former Code was held to show that this is so.(6) In Vice-Admiralty cases, the effect of appearance, the mode of objecting to the jurisdiction, and the mode of questioning the validity of a pleading,(7) the admission of appeals,(8) and costs (9) are matters governed by a settled practice under the Code, the Privy Council rules issued under Statute 2 & 3 Wm. IV. c. 51, having no operation, except in case of suits in rem in which no appearance has been entered, and of other matters to which the Code cannot be applied.(10) Though the Admiralty rules do not apparently contemplate a suit in rem and in personam being combined, they do not expressly or by necessary implication forbid it.(11) In a case such as an application for consolidation not provided for by either the Rules or the Code, the practice of the Court of Admiralty in England ought to be followed, so far as such practice can be applied to this country by analogy.(12)

(c) Testamentary and intestate jurisdiction.—The procedure in testamentary and intestate jurisdiction, whether in the High Court (1) or Provincial Courts, is governed by the Indian Succession Act (X. of 1865), and the Probate and Administration Act (V. of 1881); and by these Acts the proceedings in relation to the granting of probate and letters of administration are, except as in those Acts otherwise provided, to be regulated, so far as the circumstances of the case will admit, by this Code.(2) In any case in which there is contention the proceedings shall take, as nearly as may be, the form of a regular suit, according to the provisions of this Code, in which the petitioner for probate or letters of administration, as the case may be, is the plaintiff and the person who may have appeared to oppose the grant is the defendant.(3) Although a petition before a caveat has been entered is not a suit in the ordinary acceptation of the term, sect. 647 of the former Code, which provided that the procedure for suits should be followed so far as it could be made applicable in all proceedings other than suits and appeals, made the provisions of the Code applicable to all miscellaneous civil proceedings. Having therefore regard to this section and sects. 238, 261 of the Succession Act, it has been held that Chapter XXXVI. of the former Code was applicable to petitions for probate.(4) If the provisions of the Code are inconsistent with those of the Probate and Administration Act, those of the Code must prevail, as it is the later enactment.(5)

The Code only applies so far as the circumstances of the case admit, and though generally applicable, the circumstances peculiar to testamentary cases must be considered. So though probate proceedings are generally regulated by the Code it was held in the undermentioned case that the Court was not justified under sect. 177 of the former Code (corresponding with O. XVI. r. 20) in deciding against a caveator because he refused to answer a question and in dispensing with proof of the execution of the will, though that section would be applicable under proper circumstances.(6) So also unless a will is proved in some form, no grant of probate can be made merely on the consent of parties. Hence an agreement or compromise as regards the genuineness and due execution of a will, if its effect is to exclude evidence in proof of the will, is not lawful within the meaning of O. XXIII. r. 3, of this Code.(1)

(1) Mr. Stokes in his Commentary on the Succession Act, expresses an opinion that, having regard to the definition of District Judge in s. 3 of that Act (and the same definition is repeated in the Probate and Administration Act), as "the judge of a principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction," this section applies to proceedings of High Courts in their testamentary and intestate jurisdiction and that their proceedings also must be regulated by this Code; cf. Umrao Chand v. Bindraban Chand, 17 A. 475 (1895); In re Monohur Mookerjee, 5 C. 756 (1880); Esoof Hasshim Dooply v. Fatima Bibee, 24 C. 30 (1896); Yeshwant v. Shankar, 17 B. 388 (1892); In re the will of Dawubai, 18 B. 237 (1893). By the Rules of the Calcutta High Court the procedure in all cases is to be regulated, so far as the circumstances of the case admit, by the rules of procedure laid down in the Succession Act, whether that Act itself applies to the law or not; and in cases in which such rules are inapplicable the procedure is to be regulated by this Code, Rule 65, Belchambers, R. & O.

(d) Matrimonial jurisdiction.—In the case of matrimonial causes, as regards matters of procedure, all proceedings under the Indian Divorce Act between party and party are subject to the provisions therein contained to be regulated by this Code.(2) Thus any question as to the time within which a respondent may file an answer to a petition is to be decided not by the Rules of the English Divorce Court but by the provisions of the Code dealing with written statements.(3) But by sect. 7 of the Indian Divorce Act, which does not apply to questions of procedure,(4) the Court is enabled to follow the principal rules of the English Divorce Act in all matters which are not expressly dealt with either in the Act itself or in the Code. Thus, the Court has adopted Rule 158 of the English Rules and ordered a husband to give security for his wife's costs.(5) In a recent case in the Bombay High Court where a Parsi had married a Christian in London and had remained there, it was held that the jurisdiction was limited to Christian subjects residing within the Presidency.(6)

The purpose of the Act was temporary only, and chiefly to provide for the cultivation of the land and to prevent breaches of the peace until the Civil Court should determine the rights of the disputants, and such being its purpose the procedure provided is of a very summary character.(8) These Courts are Civil Courts and subject to the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court.(9) The Act, however, provides a special procedure, and there is no indication in it of any intention that the rules of this Code should apply to cases for which the special procedure makes no provision. The provisions of the Code therefore do not apply to such Courts in Bombay.(1)

(c) Revenue Court.—The term is defined in sect. 5, clause (2), post, which see. There is a distinction between Rent Courts and Civil Courts, as referred to in the Rent Acts; Civil Courts being Courts exercising all the powers of Civil Courts as distinguished from the Rent Courts, which only exercise powers over suits of a limited class. But a Rent Court is a Civil Court in the sense that it decides civil questions between persons seeking their civil rights.(2) It has therefore been a question in certain cases whether Rent Courts being Civil Courts in the latter sense their procedure is, in the absence of any special provision, governed by the Code. The answer to this question is to be determined not so much by an inquiry into the question whether they are Civil Courts, but whether, assuming they are such, the provisions of the Acts constituting those Courts do not exclude the provisions of the Code; in other words, are those Acts complete Codes in themselves or are they governed in matters upon which they are silent by the Code? This question, which has arisen with respect to Act XII. of 1881, and Act X. of 1859, is dealt with post.

In the majority of cases, however, no such question can arise, as most of the Tenancy Acts make special provision as regards the applicability of the Code to proceedings in Revenue Courts. In the case of Act XVIII. of 1881 (Land Revenue Central Provinces) the Code does not of itself apply, but the Chief Commissioner may, with the previous sanction of the Governor-General in Council, make rules consistent with the Act for regulating the procedure of Revenue Officers in cases for which a procedure is not prescribed by the Act, and may by any such rule direct that any provisions of the Code shall apply, with or without modification, to all or any classes of cases before Revenue Officers.(3)

The Punjab Tenancy Act (XVI. of 1887) provides that the Local Government may, with the previous sanction of the Governor-General, make rules consistent with the Act, for regulating the procedure of Revenue Courts in matters under the Act for which a procedure is not prescribed thereby, and may by any such rule direct that any provisions of the Code shall apply, with or without modification, to all or any classes of cases before those Courts. Until rules are made and subject to those rules when made, and to the provisions of the Act, the Code shall, so far as is applicable, apply to all proceedings in Revenue Courts whether before or after decree.(4)

The Lower Bengal Rent Act of 1869, now repealed, enacted that save as otherwise provided all proceedings under that Act should be regulated by the Code of Civil Procedure.(5) Under the provisions of the present Bengal

Tenancy Act (VIII. of 1885), the High Court may from time to time, with the approval of the Governor-General in Council, make rules consistent with that Act, declaring that any portions of the Code shall not apply to suits between landlord and tenant as such or to any specified classes of such suits, or shall apply to them subject to modifications specified in the rules. Subject to any rules so made, and subject also to the other provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act, this Code shall apply to all such suits.(1) Sects. 121–127, 129, 305, 320 326 of the former Code and the corresponding sections of the present Code do not apply to suits for the recovery of rent, and special rules of procedure in respect of certain matters are prescribed for such suits.(2) No rules have been made by the High Court declaring any portions of the Code inapplicable to suits between landlord and tenant.

The N. W. P. Rent Act (XII. of 1881) appears to contain complete rules of procedure upon the trial of rent suits under it, and it was the opinion of Stuart, C.J., in the under-mentioned case,(3) that it was intended to exclude the provisions of the Code. But it was held by the Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in that case, that the Courts of Revenue in the North Western Provinces, in those matters of procedure upon which the Rent Act of these provinces is silent, are governed by the Code, and that therefore the procedure furnished by sects. 43 and 373 of the former Code was applicable to suits tried under the N. W. P. Rent Act, 1881.(4) The grounds of that decision, which is, in fact, based upon the decision of the Privy Council in Nilmoni Singh Deo v. Taranath Mukerjee,(5) is that Revenue Courts are Courts of Civil Judicature within the meaning of the Code, and that unless exempted (which they were not) by the Code itself, they would in all matters, except those in which special procedure is provided in the Rent Act, be governed by the law of the Civil Code. The Full Bench decision does not apply where the Act provides a machinery of its own independent of the Civil Procedure Code, as in the case of references of suits to arbitration.(6) And though the procedure prescribed by the Code, such as that prescribed by sect. 285, of the former and sect. 63 of the present Code may be applicable as between Courts of Revenue of different grades, it cannot be applied where the conflict is between a Court of Revenue and a Civil Court.(7)

A similar question arose as regards the Bengal Rent Act, X. of 1859, which is still in force in certain places. Formerly it was held, following the Full Bench decision of the Allahabad High Court already referred to, that the

In Onkar Singh v. Bhup Singh, 16 A. 496, 498 (1894), the Court said: "We find in Revenue Courts that when the Civil Procedure Code is to be applied it is expressly so provided, so that as a general rule they are outside the scope of the Code of Civil Procedure."

Revenue Courts in those matters of procedure, upon which the Act is silent, are governed by the Code, and that in consequence sect. 43 of the former Code applied to a suit instituted under the Rent Act.(1) The decision of the Privy Council in a preceding case (2) lends support to this view in so far as it was there held that though there was nothing in the Act which provided for execution beyond the Collectors' jurisdiction, there was nothing in it to forbid the conclusion that such executions were left to the operations of Act XXXIII. of 1852 (an Act to facilitate the enforcement of judgments in places beyond the jurisdiction of the Courts pronouncing the same), or the corresponding portion of Act VIII. of 1859 (Civil Procedure Code). When a decree for rent, made by a Collector under sect. 23, Act X. of 1859, is transferred for execution to a Civil Court, no doubt the latter assuming the transfer to have been validly made will act under the procedure which governs it. The Privy Council, however, went further and held that the Collector might make the transfer himself under the provisions of the Code which were applicable, there being nothing in the Rent Act to exclude them. It has, however, subsequently been held, upon the authority of the reasoning in the Full Bench decision in Nagendro Nath Mullick v. Mathura Mohun Parhi,(3) that Act X. of 1859 is a Code complete in itself, and unaffected by the general laws of limitation, and that therefore the provisions of this Code do not apply to cases under Act X. of 1859.(4) These cases proceed in substance upon certain of the grounds taken in the dissentient judgment in the Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court, viz. that apart from the question whether Revenue Courts are Civil Courts, and Civil Courts within the meaning of the Code, the enactment of a special procedure in a special Act excluded the supposition that it was intended to import into that Act the provisions of the Code upon matters not dealt with by that Act. If it had been so intended, it would have been so enacted, as was done in the subsequent Act of 1869. When, however, an appeal goes from a Collector to a higher Court, the decree which is given on appeal is the decree of a Civil Court, and a second appeal lies to the High Court, according to the same procedure which obtains in respect of second appeals in suits tried in the ordinary Civil Courts.(5) In other words, the removal of the matter to a Civil Court brings it under the provisions regulating the procedure of that Court.

In the case of a sale held under sect. 110, Act X. of 1859, it was held that sect. 310A. of the former (corresponding to O. XXI. r. 89, of the present) Code, did not apply, as the Code was applicable up to the sale, and not after it.(6)

The Code does not apply to cases under the Chota Nagpore Landlord and Tenant Procedure Act.(7)

Apparently the Code is applicable in cases under the Madras Rent Recovery Act.(1) But though sect. 43 (O. II. r. 2, of present Code) precludes a landlord from suing for rent not included in a previous suit, this does not preclude him from adopting any other remedy the law gives him to recover his rent, as for instance by distraint under the Rent Recovery Act.(2)

The Code saves any law by a Governor or Lieutenant-Governor prescribing a special procedure for suits between land-holders and their tenants or agents, and gives power to the Local Government to modify the Code in its application to Revenue Courts. See sects. 4 and 5, post.

Judicial discretion. The Code in many of its sections leaves matters dealt with thereby to the discretion of the Court. "Discretion when applied to a Court of Law means discretion guided by law. It must be governed by rule, and not by humour. It must not be arbitrary, vague, and fanciful, but legal and regular."(3) In some sections the word "may" occurs. Great misconception is caused by saying that in some cases "may" means "must." It never can mean "must" so long as the English language retains its meaning, but it gives a power, and then it may be a question in what cases, where a Judge has a power given him by the word "may," it becomes his duty to exercise it.(4)

Construction of act of Court. The assumption on which all rules of law are founded is that the constituted tribunals are fairly competent to carry them out.(5) According to the well-known rule, the Court may presume that judicial and official acts have been regularly performed.(6) The rule is to presume that a lower Court has done its duty; neglect of duty cannot be assumed at the mere suggestion of an appellant.(7) When an act of a Court can be so construed as to have an operation consistently with law, it would be contrary to ordinary rules of construction to attach to it another signification which would altogether destroy its effect (8) Courts, however, should take care that their orders are framed strictly in accordance with the provisions of the law.(9) The presumption of regularity is a rebuttable one. Irregularity may be shown, and a mistaken petition on the part of a pleader is no ground for the Courts passing an illegal order.(10)

(2) It shall come into force on the first day of January, 1909.

(3) This section and sections 155 to 158 extend to the whole of British India: the rest of the Code extends to the whole of British India except the Scheduled Districts.

Local Extent: (a) British India.—These words exclude the territories of Native Princes and States in alliance with His Majesty, the relation between such Princes and His Majesty being a political relation, and the territories of such Princes and States forming no part of the British Dominions, although, in a political point of view, such Princes and States may be subordinate to the British Crown as the Paramount Power.(1) They were formerly declared (2) to mean the territories for the time being vested in Her Majesty by the Statute 21 & 22 Vict. c. 106 (1858), other than the settlement of Prince of Wales' Island (Penang), Singapore, and Malacca, and the first section of the statute there referred to vested in Her Majesty all territories then in the possession or under the Governments of the East India Company, and all territories which might become vested in Her Majesty by virtue of the rights transferred to Her Majesty from the East India Company. Apparently any new province acquired would become, on its acquisition, part of British India.(3) Cession of territory confers local jurisdiction.(4) The term includes territories ceded "in full sovereignty" or "in perpetuity," there being no difference between the two.(5) Prior to the General Clauses Act, 1897, it was held not to include cases where, as in the case of the British cantonment of Secunderabad, there has been no actual cession of territory; (6) nor in the case of Raj Kote, where the agreement between Government and the Native State, although in different respects dealing with the use of the land and conferring certain powers and jurisdictions on the officers of Government, did not relate to the sovereignty of the land; (7) nor as in the case of the Berars, where land was held under a sort of mortgage as a security for the fulfilment of certain engagements, which was held to be a tenure distinguishable from that on which the Crown held land assigned to it in perpetuity for the purpose of establishing a British station.(1) The definition of the words given in the present General Clauses Act (X. of 1897) is wider than that given in the former Act of 1868. The expression "British India" is now defined to mean "all territories and places within Her Majesty's dominions which are for the time being governed by Her Majesty through the Governor-General of India or through any Governor or other officer subordinate to the Governor-General of India." The effect of this altered definition is to widen the extent of what will be recognized as British India for the purposes of Indian legislation, and to avoid the difficulties which arose from its restriction to the territories vested in Her Majesty by the Statute 21 & 22 Vict. c. 106. The question of the extent of British India will now, under the Code as well as under most other Acts, depend on the fact of the place or territory being governed by His Majesty without regard to the manner in which this government was acquired, and the result being the same whether it was acquired by cession or otherwise, and permanently or temporarily.(2) From the first and under both definitions, the words "British India" have had a wider meaning than is understood by the term when used in its merely geographical sense, as appears from the Scheduled Districts Acts, 1874, and the Laws Local Extent Act, 1874, the Schedules annexed to which mention, amongst other places, the Laccadive and Nicobar Islands and Aden as parts of British India.(3) So also British Burma is a part of British India.(4)

(b) Scheduled Districts.— The term is defined in Act XIV. of 1874 to mean the territories mentioned in the first schedule thereto annexed, and also any other territory to which the Secretary of State for India, by resolution in Council, may declare the provisions of 33 Vict. c. 43, s. 1, to be applicable. The conclusion that a district is a non-regulation district does not necessarily lead to the inference that the general Acts of Legislature are there inoperative. If the Legislature has made the law in terms large enough to extend to the whole of the British territories in India, it must have full effect. It must be seen in each case in what terms the law is expressed, especially in respect of its territorial operation.(5)

"Code."—See as to Rules, sects. 121–131.

"Decree."—The term was first defined in the Code of 1877 to mean "the formal order of the Court in which the result of the decision of the suit or other judicial proceeding is embodied." This definition, which was found defective, received, after several modifications, the form in which it was enacted in 1882. The present Code omits the words "upon any right claimed or defence set up in a Civil Court," substituting the words "which conclusively determines the rights," etc. As regards cases decided under the law prior to 1882, it was observed that the law has been altered by the introduction of a more comprehensive definition of the term "decree,"(1) and that a narrow construction should not be placed upon the language of sect. 2.(2) But, as has been held by the Privy Council, the question whether an adjudication is an order or decree is to be tested, not by general principles but by the expressions of the Code, and those words are to be construed in their plain and obvious sense.(3) Thus it has recently been held that an order assessing no value, but only reproducing the statements of the decree-holder and judgment-debtor,(4) and an order assessing the value according to the statement of the decree-holder alone, after rejecting the judgment-debtor's application for time to prove a higher value, are not decrees, since they do not involve a judicial adjudication of value.(5) There has been a considerable conflict of decisions on the former section, notably as to the question as to the meaning of the term "right" employed in the section, as will be seen from the following notes. The chief importance of the definition will be found in the question whether in any particular case an appeal lies. A decree, though not according to law, if not appealed against, is binding,(6) between the parties whether principal or pro forma,(7) and their representatives who, after decree, cannot open up the original proceedings.(8) It creates an obligation superseding that existing before it,(9) which is enforceable so long as the decree is not set aside in a suit constituted for that purpose; (1) but it must be enforced in execution, and does not support a new action,(2) though a second suit will lie for possession if the plaintiff has obtained merely formal possession under the first decree.(3)

"Formal."—The expression of the Court's adjudication must be both deliberate and given in the manner provided by the Code. This word will, however, probably be not construed too strictly. In the under-mentioned case (1) the point might have been, but was not, taken, and was therefore not dealt with. Pigot, J., however, said: "I must add that had the point been raised I should have felt a difficulty in holding that a paragraph in the judgment, not drawn up in the form of a decree, and not embodied in a separate form, is, within the terms of the Code of Civil Procedure, a decree at all."

"Adjudication."—An adjudication ordinarily exists where the Court exercises its mind in the determination of a contested cause. In the case of ex parte decrees in the Court of first instance, the Code speaks of them as decrees, and treats them as such. They come within the definition, the plaintiff being present, and there being an adjudication on the merits. Where, however, it was objected that a decree was not within this section, upon the ground that it was not passed after argument and after a judgment, but merely upon a default, viz. the non-appearance of the appellant, it was held that the decree was none the less a formal expression of an adjudication, because it was not preceded by an argument or by a judgment—written or otherwise.(5) An order of dismissal for default is now excepted.

"Conclusively determines."—The expression "decides," which was employed in the last Code, was used to denote what is generally denoted by a "final" adjudication; the term "final" having been avoided apparently as it more usually denotes non-appealable, or rather conclusive.(6) Thus it has been said that when permission is given under sect. 373 (now O. XXIII. r. 1) to withdraw a suit or appeal, it does not decide the suit or appeal. When permission is given as regards the suit, the matter in issue is withdrawn from the adjudication of the Court, and when the order is made in the course of appeal, it decides nothing as to the merits of the decree of the first Court, but it merely wipes out that decree by reason of the suit being withdrawn.(7) And an order disallowing an application under sect. 372 (now O. XXII. r. 10), inasmuch as, although it may be a formal expression of adjudication on the right claimed to be made a party to the suit, yet such an adjudication does not decide the suit so far as regards the Court expressing it.(1) But an order dismissing an interpleader suit (under O. XXXV.) is a decree within the meaning of this section, for it is the formal expression of an adjudication on the defence.(2)

A final decree is sometimes understood as meaning the concluding and conclusive ruling of the Court as opposed to an interlocutory order.(3) In another sense a decree becomes final when the time for the last appeal allowed has expired, or, if appealed, it has become final by the decree of the High Court as the ultimate Court in the country.(4) It is not, however, necessary that the decree should be final in the sense that there is nothing further to de done. Questions may have to be determined in order to carry the decision into effect. Where a decree ascertains and fixes the rights of the parties, the fact that further proceedings before a Master, Referee, or other person are necessary to carry it into effect, does not render it any the less final, if all the directions depending on the result of the proceedings are given in the decree.(5) Thus an order determining that a certain person is a partner in a business, and directing an account to be taken, is a decree.(6) While every decree consists of a final adjudication, such decrees are termed interlocutory or preliminary, whilst those that bring the suit to an absolute end are termed final. So again the preliminary decree for partition adjudicates the plaintiff's right to obtain a partition, and practically decides the suit. All that remains to be done being an inquiry into minor matters necessary for the final disposal of the case.(7) The fallacy in the objection to treating the preliminary order as a decree lay in treating the words "deciding the suit" as equivalent to finally disposing of the suit, it being argued that the suit is not disposed of until the arithmetical result is worked out. In the case of the preliminary order everything has been decided, except what physical pieces of property will be the equivalent of certain shares. Therefore an order in a suit for partition, which declares the specific rights of the parties and the property to be partitioned, decides that the suit must be decreed, as after such an order the suit could not be dismissed by the Court by which it was made, and is therefore an order which adjudicates upon the right claimed and the defence set up in the suit, and which, as far as the Court expressing it is concerned, decides the suit within the definition of a "decree," and is therefore appealable as a decree.(1) These decisions have now been recognised, and the section expressly includes a preliminary decree.

An order, however, passed in a suit for partition, subsequently to the preliminary decree, appointing a commission to make the partition, is not an order in execution, and, therefore, is not appealable under sect. 244 (now sect. 47) of the Code. It is an interlocutory order pending the suit which has not been finally decided; and the appellant may take objection to it in an appeal against the final decree.(2)

An order directing accounts (see O. XX. r. 16) was not appealable by the Codes of 1859 or 1877. It was only when the amending Act of 1879 was passed declaring that such an order came within the definition of a decree that it became appealable; (3) and it is still within the definition as a preliminary decree. The definition of "decree" implies that an order directing accounts is separable from the rest of the decree adjudicating on the rights claimed or the defences set up in the suit, and therefore though a provisional decree, is appealable.(4) An order determining that a certain person is a partner, settling the shares of each of the partners in a business and directing an account to be taken, is a decree and is appealable, and was held to be so appealable in a preliminary stage or when appealing from the final decree.(5) But where in a decree to take accounts an order was made which was a mere matter of procedure and not a question as to the rights of the parties, such as an order refusing to require the defendants to give inspection of certain books, the order was held not to be a decree or an order on a question relating to the execution of a decree.(6) Moreover, the words "directing an account to be taken" were held to be used in a precise and technical sense.(7) Accordingly an order declaring that the defendants were liable to pay such sum as the Government Surveyor might certify was held not to be a decree, as it neither came within these words nor was an adjudication which decided the suit.(8) The substitution of the words "conclusively determines" for "decides" does not appear to effect any change in the law as above stated.

"The rights of the parties." The last Code used the words "right claimed or defence set up." There can, we think, be little doubt that what the Legislature originally meant by these words to refer to, were rights of a substantive as distinguished from rights of a merely processual character. In other words, that a decree was, so far as the right claimed, an adjudication on the merits (that is, the right to recover land, money, etc., claimed in the suit), and so far as the defence set up, an adjudication on the defence which might be grounded either on the merits, using that term in its generally accepted sense, or on some point of law affecting the merits, such as limitation. The contrary construction,(1) namely, that the right might be one merely of procedure, appeared to be negatived both by the general language of the section and by the circumstance that if it were correct there could not be any occasion for specifically making an order rejecting a plaint, a decree, as such an order directly involves an adjudication against the plaintiff's right to proceed with the suit as brought by him (2)

The view here contended for has been expressly adopted or applied in several cases. In an early case Wilson and Field, JJ., were disposed to hold that a decree must be an expression of opinion upon the rights of the parties, and therefore the dismissal of a suit on a ground wholly apart from the merits of the case, such as a dismissal under sect. 97 (now O. IX. r. 2) for non-service of summons, was not a decree.(3) It has been held that a decision under sect. 5 of the Court Fees Act is not a decree, and that the right obtained or defence set up must be a right or defence set up in the suit or appeal, and not a right to have the suit or appeal heard on a particular stamp or the plaint or the memorandum of appeal rejected on account of the stamp.(4) Similarly it has been held by the Allahabad High Court,(5) and was formerly held by the Calcutta High Court,(6) that the order of dismissal of an appeal under sect. 556 (now O. XLI. r. 17) is not a decree. It was observed by the Court in the first of the Calcutta cases cited that such an order was not "the formal expression of an adjudication upon a right claimed;" that through the default the appellant had rather lost his right to obtain the adjudication of his right claimed in the proceedings or suit; that the mere right to be heard did not come within the definition of a decree. It was, however, held by one of the Judges of the Bombay High Court,(1) and more recently by a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court (2) (Prinsep, J., dissenting), that such an order is a decree on the ground as stated by the Bombay High Court that it is an adjudication adverse to the appellant's right to have his appeal heard and it decides the appeal. In the last case it was argued with, as it is submitted, considerable force that the word "right" means a substantial right arising out of the merits of the case; that the juxtaposition of the words "right claimed" and "defence set up" showed that the right asserted or sought to be enforced meant the right asserted or sought to be enforced in the suit or appeal. It must have some connection with the relief sought, and therefore with the merits of the case, and does not connote the processual right of a party to be heard, which is ancillary to the enforcement of the substantive right claimed in the suit or appeal itself. It was further argued that the words "defence set up" cannot mean the mere opposition by a defendant or respondent to his adversary being heard, but must mean an answer to the relief sought. There must be an adjudication of right, and in the case of a dismissal for default the Court declines to adjudicate and does not enter into the merits of the case. These contentions were overruled by the majority of the Court.(3) Previously, moreover, it had been held by the Calcutta,(4) the Allahabad (5) and Madras (6) High Courts, that the analogous case of the dismissal of a suit under sect. 102 (now O. IX. r. 8) was not a decree. On the other hand, it has been held that an order under sect. 381 (now O. XXV. r. 2), dismissing a suit for failure to furnish security for costs, is a decree notwithstanding that the right adjudicated upon in the order under sect. 381 is the plaintiff's right to sue and not the right which he claims in the suit.(7) On the other hand, an order rejecting an appeal under sect. 549 (now O. XLI. r. 10) for failure to furnish security has been held not to be a decree,(8) the Court observing that the adjudication must be on a right claimed or defence set up. And it has recently been held by the Calcutta High Court that an order for security in stay of execution is not a decree within the meaning of this section because it does not determine the rights of the parties.(1) It has also been held that an order rejecting an application for permission to sue as a pauper and striking the case off the Court's file was a decree, as the matter disposed of was in fact whether the plaintiff had a right to institute the suit, and the effect of the order was to negative that right and to strike the case off the file.(2) Here again the matter has been subject of dissent, it being subsequently held that no appeal will lie from an order rejecting an application for leave to appeal in forma pauperis, the ground being that it was not an adjudication deciding a right claimed in a suit.(3) On the other hand, an order made under sect. 366 (now O. XXII. r. 3) that a suit do abate has been held to be virtually a decree, though it is a question to be determined before the suit or appeal is heard on the merits, on the ground that it disposes of the plaintiff's claim as completely as if the suit had been dismissed.(4) This decision again has been dissented from by the Allahabad High Court.(5) The Allahabad High Court has in one case (6) held that an order giving leave to withdraw a suit under sect. 373, or 373 and 582 (now O. XXIII. r. 1, and sect. 107), is a decree; but subsequently that Court (7) and the Bombay (8) and Calcutta (9) High Courts have held that such an order is not a decree on the ground that it does not express any adjudication on the thing claimed, but leaves all issues in the suit undetermined and relegates the parties to the position they occupied before the suit was filed. Where the Appellate Court passed an order directing the case to be sent back to the original Court, with orders to pass a formal decree in accordance with the award of an arbitrator, it was held that the order was a decree as the matter was before the Appellate Court on the merits and the order was intended to finally dispose of the matter.(10) In the under-mentioned case a person claimed to appear in a suit as guardian. The Court decided that he had not got that right, and it was held, per Tyrrell, J., that that order decided his position in the suit, that the order was a decree and that an appeal might have been preferred.(1) In a recent case in the Bombay High Court it was said that in applying this definition of decree it will be found that in the reported cases in that Court the rights of the parties with regard to the matter in controversy have been taken to mean general rights (such as rights in relation to status, jurisdiction, limitation and frame of suit) which if decided must have a general effect on the proceedings.(2)

(3) The grounds given by the referring judgment were that the order was the expression of an adjudication which was formal, and which decided the appeal. The question, however, remains was it a formal decisive adjudication of a "right" in the sense in which that word is used in the section? See pp. 488, 489, 7 C. W. N.

Where the plaintiff failed to reply to interrogatories and the Court dismissed the suit under sect. 136 (now O. XI. r. 21), it was contended that the order of dismissal was not a decree as it did not adjudicate on the merits of the right claimed. But this contention was overruled and the view adopted that when the procedure of the Court finally disposes of the suit it is a decree.(3)

It was observed by Sargent, C.J., in dealing with the objection that the order did not adjudicate on the merits of the right claimed, that having regard to the numerous authorities the other way (namely, those treating as decrees orders not dealing with the merits), it was too late to re-open the question, although had it been res integra it must be admitted that there was force in the argument based on the words of the section and also on the circumstance of there being a special provision for an order rejecting the suit, and that where the procedure of the Court finally disposes of the suit it is a decree.(4)

It appears to be advisable to adopt an interpretation which affords a ready test to distinguish between decrees on the merits and merely processual orders. If this is not done each case must be more or less empirically decided as and when it arises and on its peculiar circumstances. In such case the general test would appear to be—"does the order finally dispose of the suit?" It may be noted in this connection that in the report of the Select Committee (March 12, 1903) on the Bill introduced in December, 1901, the Committee stated that they omitted the words restricting "decree" to adjudications "upon the merits," as was proposed to be done because they might be held to exclude final decisions given wholly upon questions of law. But as to this it is perhaps sufficient to point out that while a claim with merits in its popular sense can be defeated by a defence based upon a point of law, such as limitation, it can only succeed by virtue of a favourable adjudication on the merits. The section, however, has since been expressly amended so as to exclude any order of dismissal for default. This appears to indicate that the "rights of the parties" referred to do not include mere processual rights, and that to constitute a decree there must be an expression of opinion on the rights of the parties in the sense of an opinion upon the merits of the case, that is on the right asserted in the suit or upon the defence, whether of law or fact, set up to defend such alleged right. Moreover, a dismissal for default does not "conclusively determine" the right of the party against whom it is passed.

"Civil Court."—In the corresponding definition in Act X. of 1877, the word "civil," which was introduced in the last Code, found no place. It has been held that a Civil Court does not include a Revenue Court in the N. W. P., and the term "decree" in this Code does not include the decree of such a Court.(1) Though the words "Civil Court" have been now omitted, probably as unnecessary, the definition of course only applies to such Courts.

"In the suit."—Where there is no civil suit there is no decree, and in consequence no appeal.(2) No doubt there is authority for the view that the term "suit" is a very extensive one,(3) but the term ought to be confined to such proceedings as under that description are directly dealt with by the Code, or such as by the operation of the particular Acts which regulate them are treated as suits.(4) The term "suit" has not been defined for the purposes of the Code.(5) The conjunction of the words "suit or appeal" in the last Code appeared to show that appeals, which are often considered a stage of the suit, are not to be deemed to fall within it. The section now refers to suit only. The word is wide enough to cover every proceeding, whether original or appellate, terminable in such an adjudication (as is referred to in the first part of the clause), under this Code.

The particular orders mentioned in the second clause of the last Code as constituting a decree did so by way of addition and exception to the general definition of that term in the first clause.(6) This, as has been pointed out,(7) is particularly evident from the mention of orders passed in execution proceedings under sect. 244 of the last Code, as they cannot be said in any sense to finally decide the suit or appeal; though an order rejecting a plaint may be said to finally determine, so far as the Court which makes the order is concerned, that the suit as brought will not lie, and may have been made a decree on that ground.(8) The enumeration of orders was held to be exhaustive, and not merely illustrative or explanatory.(9) Though it cannot be said that the rule was always strictly observed (vide post), analogy could not extend the term to any orders other than, though like, those specifically mentioned.

(a) Execution proceedings.—Under the last Code, sect. 647 (now sect. 141) was held to show that applications for execution were not suits, but only proceedings in a suit, and appeals from orders on applications were dealt with in sect. 588 (now sect. 104, O. XLIII. r. 1).(1) Orders passed in execution were expressly provided for in the second clause of the section, the first clause of which referred to suits or appeals only. Under sect. 48 (now sect. 26) of the Code a suit must commence with a plaint, and therefore a proceeding under sect. 244 (now sect. 47), though it is a proceeding in a suit, is not a suit.(2) The corresponding words in the Code of 1877 were, "suit or other judicial proceeding," which last expression was held to include proceedings in execution. But now execution proceedings are not suits, and an order thereon is not a decree unless it determines a question within sect. 47.(3)

(b) Insolvency proceedings. Insolvency proceedings under the former Code were held to be proceedings in a suit. Thus an order under sect. 358 of the former Code, declaring an insolvent absolved from further liability, was held to be a decree as finally deciding the suit; (4) but as has been pointed out,(5) it is not easy to understand what was the suit decided by such order, as even execution proceedings, though included in a suit, are not themselves a suit. An appeal from such an order,(6) as well as from an order refusing to declare a person absolved,(7) has been heard, but without any objection or argument. The matter is now regulated by Act III. of 1907.

(c) Probate proceedings. Contentious proceedings for the grant of probate were held to be a suit, as an order granting probate, though spoken of in the Probate Act as an order, is for the purposes of the Code a decree, because, so far as the Court granting the probate is concerned, it decides not only a right to have the probate granted, but also the defence set up against the grant.(8) This is the law now. But where in an Administration suit the first Court recorded a finding on a substantial question of right between the parties and receivers, and the plaintiff (without applying to have a formal decree drawn up) appealed against the finding on the ground that it was a decree, it was held that there was no formal decree from which he could appeal.(9)

(d) Arbitration proceedings.– As regards these proceedings the position under the former Code was this:—When an order for reference to arbitration was made in a suit under sect. 508 (now clause 3, Sch. II.), judgment was given on the award, and upon the judgment so given a decree followed under sect. 522 (now clause 16 of same); but no appeal lay from such decree except so far as it was in excess of or not in accordance with the award. Orders under sect. 514 superseding such an arbitration or under sect. 518 modifying such award were appealable under the provisions of sect. 588 of the former Code. There was a difference of opinion in and between the High Courts whether orders passed on an application under sect. 523 of the former Code to have an agreement for reference to arbitration, or under sect. 525 of the same Code to have an arbitration award, filed in Court were or were not decrees in a suit. The determination of this question considerably depended upon the meaning to be given to the words in both these sections—"The application shall be in writing and shall be numbered and registered as a suit," etc., and whether an order of reference under sect. 523, or an order under sect. 525, was the formal expression of an adjudication upon a right claimed or defence set up which finally decided the suit. In some cases the words cited were held to show that the proceeding was a suit; in others it was considered that they were merely intended for administrative purposes. The Allahabad High Court held that neither proceedings under sects. 523 (1) nor 525 (2) were suits, and the Madras High Court, on the contrary, held that both proceedings under sects. 523 (3) and 525 (1) were suits, and the orders made thereunder were decrees and appealable. The Calcutta and Bombay High Courts did not deal with sect. 523, but the first Court held that orders under sect. 525 were decrees,(5) and the second Court held that a proceeding under that section was not a suit.(6) Proceedings under the Land Acquisition Act (I. of 1894) are not suits.(7) It is a special Statute enacted to deal with special cases, and orders made under it are outside the ordinary course of the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts, and it gives no right of appeal to the Privy Council.(8) Under this Act the High Court is the ultimate umpire in a series of arbitration proceedings, and its award is neither a decree under this section nor a final judgment or order within the meaning of clause 39 of the Letters Patent.(9). Clause 16 of the second schedule determines the cases in which only an appeal will lie from decrees or orders passed in arbitration proceedings. See that schedule and cases there cited.

held (1) to be so under the Code of 1859. A settlement case under sect. 104 (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, before it was modified by Act III. of 1898, B. C., was held not to be a suit.(2) Proceedings contemplated by sect. 27, Act VIII. of 1865, Madras, are summary, and an order passed in them cannot, it was held, be said to have decided a suit or appeal and was therefore not a decree.(3) An order under the Indian Trusts Act, refusing to remove a trustee, has been held not to be a decree.(4) An order appointing a person a member of a committee, under sect. 10 of the Religious Endowments Act, 1863, has been held by the Privy Council not to be a decree for the purposes of sect. 540 (now sect. 96); their Lordships observing that "there was no civil suit respecting the appointment." (5) An order refusing (6) or granting (7) leave to sue under the Religious Endowments Act is not a decree nor is an order passed on a contempt of Court.(8) There appears to be no change in this respect.

Rejection of a plaint. -An order rejecting a plaint is a decree, whatever may be the grounds, or absence of grounds, for that order. In every case an order falling within sect. 54 (now O. VII. r. 11) is a decree (9) The words are, however, not limited to the cases provided for in sects. 53 and 54 (now O. VI. r. 17, O. VII. r. 11), post.(10) Nor does it make any difference that the rejection may be due to a misapplication of the rules of the Code or practice.(11) So not only is an order rejecting a plaint on the ground that it is insufficiently stamped (12) a decree, but also an order given on the ground that the plaintiffs are minors.(13) And orders which are substantially in effect orders rejecting plaints have been held to be decrees; as an order returning a plaint for including causes of action which could not be joined without leave of the Court; (14) or an order under sect. 331 (now O. XXI. r. 99) refusing to number and register a claim as a suit, which is of the same effect as a refusal to register.

a plaint, or which, in other words, amounts to the rejection of a plaint.(1) An order refusing to entertain a suit because the section of the law to which it related was not cited in the plaint, was held under the Code of 1859 to be a judgment. The Court pointed out that such an order ought to state whether the suit was dismissed or the plaint rejected, and under what sections respectively.(2) An order rejecting an appeal stands on the same footing. An order rejecting a plaint is a decree, and by sect. 532 (now O. XXXVII. r. 2) of the Code the provisions thereinbefore contained are made to apply to appeals, so far as such provisions are applicable. An order therefore rejecting or dismissing an appeal is a decree of the Appellate Court under the terms of the definition.(3) In the Code there is no separate provision which allows the Appellate Court to "reject" a memorandum of appeal on the ground of its being barred by limitation. Sect. 543 (now O. XLI. r. 3) is limited to cases in which the memorandum is not drawn up in the manner prescribed by the Code, and it is only by applying sect. 54 (c) (now O. VII. r. 11), mutatis mutandis (as provided by sect. 582, now sect. 107, O. XXII. r. 11), to appeals that the Code can be understood to make provision for rejection of appeals as barred by limitation. Sect. 4 of the Limitation Act says that the appeal shall be dismissed. It is clear therefore that such an order of dismissal is a decree as it disposes of the appeal.(4) So an order dismissing an appeal as being presented out of time,(5) rejecting an appeal as not duly presented, the vakalutnamah being executed in favour of two vakils but accepted only by one; (6) or for deficiency of court-fee; (7) an order rejecting a memorandum of appeal on the ground that it contained language disrespectful to the Court of first instance,(8) have been held to be decrees. On the other hand, it has been held that an order returning a memorandum of appeal on the ground that the value of the suit was beyond the pecuniary limits of the Court's jurisdiction is not a decree, as it did not decide but refused to decide the appeal.(9) And an order returning a plaint for presentation to the proper Court is not a decree.(10) Where there is no appeal and no appellate decree there can be no second appeal. "The determination of any question within sect. 47 or sect. 144." —These are orders of the Court executing a decree determining any question relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree, provided that these questions arise between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed or their representatives; and orders for restitution upon the variance or reversal of a decree. It is stated that the word "within" has been substituted for "mentioned or referred to in" with a view to bringing within the definition of decree orders against sureties (see sect. 145) and orders as to Court fees in pauper suits (see O. XXXIII. r. 13), and thus providing for appeals therefrom. It has been recently held that an order on an application under O. XXXIII. r. 12 for payment under O. XXXIV. r. 10 or 11 is an order under sect. 47 and appealable accordingly.(2)

The Privy Council (3) and the Courts in India (4) have held that a narrow construction is not to be placed upon the language of sect. 47 (formerly sect. 244). The object of that section is that the Court having the parties already before it should decide all questions relating to execution, etc., arising between them in place of allowing one or the other of them to put his adversary to the delay and cost of a separate suit in cases in which but for this section it might be possible for him to do. In order to affect this object completely without injustice to the parties an order under this section has been included within the definition of "decree" so as to allow an appeal.(5) It is of the utmost importance that all objections to execution sales should be disposed of as cheaply and as speedily as possible.(6) If where a proceeding is sought to be set aside, that proceeding is one which relates to execution, and if the contest as to its validity is between the parties to the suit, the specific ground on which the proceeding is impeached, whether it be fraud in the execution proceedings or other ground, is not material within the meaning of sect. 47.(7) The expression "relating to execution," etc., in sect. 47, is wide and somewhat vague, though perhaps necessarily so, and has caused some difficulty in several cases; but once a case is held to come within these words, the law seems plain enough.(8) The matter must be determined by an order under sect. 47, and not by separate suit, and such an order is a decree and as such appealable.

It was not, however, the intention of the Legislature to render all orders (irrespective of their nature), made in relation to the execution of a decree,

"decrees," and as such appealable.(1) In the first place the former definition excluded matters specified in sect. 588.(2) As regards others, whether it be expedient to generalize on the question may be doubtful, though the test laid down by Banerji, J.,(3) would probably be found sufficient in most if not in all cases.(4) Banerji, J., held, in the case referred to,(5) that it is not every order made in execution of a decree that comes within sect. 47 (formerly sect. 244). If that were so, every interlocutory order in an execution proceeding, such as an order granting or refusing process for the examination of witnesses would be appealable; and far greater latitude would be given of appealing against orders in such proceedings than is allowed as against orders made in suits before decree—a thing which could hardly have been intended. An order in execution proceedings can come under that section only when it determines some question relating to the rights and liabilities of parties with reference to the relief granted by the decree; not when it determines merely an incidental question as to whether the proceedings are to be conducted in a certain way. The language of sect. 47, which enacts that certain questions "shall be determined by an order of the Court executing the decree and not by separate suit" clearly indicates that the questions contemplated by the section must be of a nature such that it is possible to suppose that but for the section they could have formed the subject of determination by a separate suit. But a question of an incidental character can never come under that description and an order determining such a question cannot therefore be a decree as defined in sect. 2. But however it may be as to the test suggested, when the effect of an order is to determine the rights of a party with respect to a matter material to the due execution of the decree, such order is a "decree," and there is an appeal.(6) Thus it has been held that an order for distribution by the Court is a decree under this section read with section 47.(7) Generally it may be said that all orders passed in execution proceedings relating to the right of a person to execute a decree or the liability of a person to satisfy the same, or to stay of execution, relate to the execution of the decree, and are "decrees" within this section. The matter is one which can be more conveniently dealt with under section 47, to the notes of which section reference should be made. No appeal lies from the order as distinguished from the decree of an Assistant Collector of the first class.(8)

Under the last Code it was held that the definition of "order," given in sub-clause 14, could not be used for the purpose of defining the word "order" in the previous part of the section, because it expressly excluded everything in that part.(1)

Preliminary decree.—See note on "Conclusively determines."

"Dismissal for default."—See note on "The rights of the parties."

"Decree-holder" and "judgment-debtor."—The second term means only any person against whom an order has been made, and there is now a reference in the definition to the order being capable of execution. The transfer of a judgment-debtor's liability is not recognized, except to a very limited extent, in case of his death, to his legal representative (see sect. 50, formerly sect. 231, post). On the other hand, a decree-holder may assign his right under the decree, or such transfer may be affected by operation of law. The words "and includes any person to whom such decree or order is transferred," have now been omitted. It was held with regard to the former definition that it must not be applied where it was repugnant to the context. The only rule, it was held, which would harmonize this section, and the provisions relating to the execution of assigned decrees, was that an assignee under an oral assignment has, as such, no locus standi at all to apply for execution, but that as regards an assignee in writing or by operation of law the Court has a discretion whether to recognize such assignment or not.(2) The definition was held to include a person to whom a share of a decree is transferred.(3) Notwithstanding the omission the law is now the same. The representative of a judgment-debtor was held to be a judgment-debtor within the meaning of sect. 258, now O. XXI. r. 2, post.(4)

Under the General Clauses Act.(5) the word "person," unless there is anything repugnant in the context, includes "any company or association or body of individuals, whether incorporated or not." In Admiralty proceedings in rem a vessel is deemed invested with a personality, and the expression "defendant" in O. I. rr. 3 and 4 (formerly sect. 28), post, includes a vessel.(6) And if a vessel can be a defendant, it may be a judgment-debtor.

"District Court."—This section is one of those which, by sect. 1, are excluded from consideration when dealing with a question in a Scheduled District (7) to which the Code has not been extended. In some of these districts the District Judge is designated Deputy-Commissioner, but in Chota Nagpur the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, and not that of a Deputy-Commissioner, is the Principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction, and therefore the District Court.(8) In the other provinces the Court of the District Judge is the principal Civil Court, except in the Presidency towns, in which the High Courts on their original side are such Courts. See as to the definition of "District Judge" and "High Court," Act X. of 1897 (General Clauses). The definitions apply, however, only "unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context," so that in construing the term in any particular Act the particular provisions of that Act will have to be taken into consideration. The concluding words "every Court, etc.," of the former definition have been re-enacted in sect. 3. The words "every Court" refer to the Courts governed by this Code. Under sect. 8, post, this section does not apply to Presidency Small Cause Courts, and those Courts are not included in the words "every Court of Small Causes," but such Courts are subordinate to the High Court under the provisions of their Acts and the Charters of the High Court.(1)

"Foreign Court"—"Foreign judgment."—The words "not having authority in British India" were inserted to exclude the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council from the definition. The other English Courts are, with regard to the Courts in India, as much Foreign Courts as the Courts of France or of any other foreign country.(2) So also are the Courts in the Native States in India,(3) in Ceylon and the Colonies. As regards Courts situate beyond the limits of British India and established by the Governor-General in Council, see sect. 13, post. On account of the extension in the definition of "British India" the number of such Courts will not be so large as before, but the Courts in Residency Bazaars and in British cantonments in Native States will afford the most ordinary instances of Courts which though outside British India are not foreign Courts.(4) This definition of "Foreign Court" is for the purpose of this Code only, and does not avail to extend the jurisdiction of the High Court so as to enable it to restrain suits pending in Courts which are outside its jurisdiction under the Charter.(5) As to foreign judgments, see sects. 13, 14, post.

"Government pleader."—See O. XXXIII. rr. 6, 7, 9, and O. XXVII. rr. 4, 5, 6, 8, post, which deal with functions imposed by the Code on Government Pleaders. As to the definition of "Local Government," see sect. 3 (29), Act X. of 1897. The words italicized have been added to meet a practical difficulty said to have been experienced on occasions when it is necessary for the Government Pleader to appoint another pleader to conduct the case.

"Judge." This definition is different from that contained in sect. 19 of the Penal Code, as the requirements of the Civil and Criminal law are distinct. "Officer," of course, includes "officers," as in the case of two or more Judges constituting a Bench. The term "Court" is not defined.(6) Where a Court is composed of more than one officer, each doing separate work allotted to him by the Chief Judge, each officer is individually a Judge, and must be deemed to be a presiding officer of a separate Court.(1) As regards the appointment, disqualification, and jurisdiction of Judges, see notes to sect. 9, post.

"Judgment."—The term has here a different signification to that it possesses in English law, in which it is used in the sense attached to the term "decree" under the Code. Under the former practice it was restricted to a decision of the Common Law Courts, the term "decree" being used in the Court of Chancery. This distinction is, however, now abolished, the expression "judgment" being generally used, except in matrimonial causes, in which the term "decree" is still retained.(2) The judgment must be based on relevant facts duly proved before the Court, and a Judge should not therefore import into a case his own knowledge of particular facts: (3) and it must be founded on a case either to be found in the pleadings or involved in or consistent with the case thereby made.(4) A Judge may, however, consult other Judges before whom the trial is not held.(5)

Excessive elaboration tends to impair the value of a judgment by defeating its proper object, which is to support by the most cogent reasons that suggest themselves the final conclusions at which the Judge has conscientiously arrived. The Privy Council therefore on these grounds adversely criticized a judgment of a voluminous character recording the fluctuations of the Judge's mind from day to day in the course of an exceptionally long trial, and the effect (often temporary upon him) of a particular piece of evidence or argument of counsel: since from such a mass of often conflicting statements it is not easy for a Court of Appeal to extract the precise grounds on which the final conclusion rests.(6) Moreover it is a substantial objection to a judgment that it does not dispose of the question as it was presented by the parties, e.g., where it finds a particular signature to be a forgery which both sides admit to be genuine.(7) For the provisions of the Code as to judgments, see sect. 33 and O. XX., post, and Index, sub voc.

ment" is used in the Letters Patent of the High Courts, clauses 39 and 40, speaking respectively of appeals to the Privy Council from "any final judgment, decree or order," and from "any preliminary or interlocutary judgment, decree or order." (1) Clause 15 (and clause 10 of the Allahabad Letters Patent) speak of a "judgment" (without any such qualification) providing that an appeal to the High Court shall lie from the judgment (not being a sentence or order passed or made in any criminal trial) of one Judge of the said High Court.(2) The meaning of this term in this clause has been the subject-matter of discussion in numerous cases. It is well settled that the term is not limited to the final judgment in the suit,(3) nor, indeed, to a judgment in a suit at all.(4) In, however, the first of the cases last cited, a very wide meaning was given to the term, which was held to mean any decision or determination affecting the rights or the interest of any suitor or applicant, it being said to be impossible to prescribe any limits to the right of appeal founded upon the nature of the order or decree appealed from, though, assuming that a party had the right to be heard in every case, it was obvious that the duty of the Appellate Court might vary considerably according to the nature of the order or decree complained of, and that the Appellate Court would rightly decline to interfere where the lower Court had been given a discretion.(5) This view has, however, been considered to be too broad,(6) and the definition commonly accepted is that of Couch, C.J.,(7) which has become classical,(8) having been approved in numerous cases.(9)

"We think," said Couch, C.J., "that 'judgment' in clause 15 means a decision which affects the merits of the question between the parties by determining some right or liability. It may be either final, or preliminary, or interlocutory, the difference between them being that a final judgment determines the whole cause or suit, and a preliminary or interlocutory judgment determines only a part of it, leaving other matters to be determined." But the Calcutta High Court has held that a narrow construction should not be placed upon the term, and while concurring in the definition has held that it is not exhaustive.(1) It has been said that an appeal will lie under clause 15 only in those cases in which an appeal is allowed under the Code.(2) Whether this be so or not, as a question of jurisdiction, it may safely be said that an appeal should ordinarily lie where allowed by the Code, and will in most cases probably be not entertained where it is not.

Though the marginal note to clause 15 would make it appear that the section was intended to apply only to judgments of Courts of original jurisdiction, yet these notes form no part of the original, and it has been held that the words of the clause are sufficiently comprehensive to include judgments passed in the exercise of jurisdiction either original (3) or appellate. And therefore an appeal lies under this clause from the judgment of a Divisional Court in the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction when the Judges of the Court are equally decided in opinion; but under clause 36 the decision of the senior Judge prevails.(4) Clause 36 (or clause 27 of the Allahabad Letters Patent) was superseded by sect. 575 of the last Code; (5) but the latter section did not take away the right of appeal given by clause 15, and if the Judges differ, but did not refer under sect. 575, there was an appeal under the Letters Patent.(6)

(3) The original side of the H. C. is not subordinate to any other side of the H. C., but an integral part of it. An appeal lies, under clause 15, from the decision of a single Judge or where there are two Judges if they disagree: Rai Benode v. Rai Pasupati, 13 C. W. N. 105 (1907); Gopi Nath v. Moheshwar, 35 C. 1096 (1908). But if they agree there is no appeal except to the Privy Council. Moreover, there were cases to which sect. 575 did not apply, and to these clause 36 (or clause 27) of the Letters Patent is still applicable.(1) There is an appeal from the decision of one of the Judges exercising Admiralty or Vice-admiralty jurisdiction.(2)

It often happens that Judges composing Divisional Benches, although they concur in the mode of deciding the appeal, either disagree as to some of the reasons or assign different reasons for their judgments. But in order that there be an appeal the difference of opinion must be as to the final and complete decision of the case and not a difference of opinion upon one or more of the points arising in it.(3) Points not raised before a Divisional Bench cannot be raised on appeal.(4) As to limitation, see below.(5)

The following orders have been held to be "judgments": an order rejecting a plaint; (6) orders made in execution; (7) an order passed allowing the Administrator-General commission at a certain rate; (8) an order referring it to the Commissioner to take accounts between the parties to a suit; (9) a decision refusing leave to institute a suit on the original side of the High Court; (10) an order appointing a guardian; (11) a judgment dismissing an appeal as barred by limitation; (12) an order in revision; (13) an order refusing stay of execution; (14) an order on an application for re-admission of an appeal; (15)

"Order."—Reference should be made to the preceding cases in the commentary on the definition of "decree." Some others not there cited may be noticed. A suit having been instituted under the Religious Endowments Act, 1863, the plaintiff desired to withdraw the suit with liberty to sue again, and an order was made permitting him to do so, and directing that the costs be paid from the funds of the institution. It was held that the order as to costs was not a decree, and that no appeal lay.(1) Orders for payment of costs under the sections noted in the decision cited are not decrees.(2) The decision of a taxing officer is not an order.(3) An order under O. IX. r. 2 (formerly sect. 97), post, has been held not to be a decree; (4) as also orders under sect. 10, Act XX. of 1863 (Madras Pagoda Act); (5) under sect. 5, Religious Endowments Act (6) (XX. of 1863); under sect. 16, clause 7 of Madras Reg. III. of 1802; (7) an order under sect. 18, Act. XX. of 1863, refusing (8) or granting (9) leave to sue; an order under sect. 84 of the Bengal Tenancy Act; (10) under sect. 173 of the same Act; (11) the decision of a special Judge under sect. 104, clause 2 of the same Act; (12) an order under the Indian Trust Act refusing to remove a trustee; (13) an order rejecting an application to restore an application to set aside a sale; (14) an order awarding compensation under sect. 491 of the last Code,(15) and under sect. 206 of the same Code.(16)

"Pleader."—The construction of the last clause presents some difficulty. The meaning, however, of the definition becomes obvious if the clauses of which the sentence is made up are inverted, and it is read thus: "Pleader means every person, including an advocate, vakil, and an attorney of a High Court, entitled to appear and plead for another in Court." It is only the pleader

"Public officer."—This section is the same as that of the preceding Code, with the slight alterations italicized, and the definition of "public officer" has been taken from that of "public servant" in the Indian Penal Code, with some omissions.(2) For the definition of "Judge," see ante, and of "Court of Justice" the Penal Code,(3) which gives the general signification of the expression. The following persons have been held to be public officers under this section, or public servants under the Penal Code, under provisions of that Code which correspond with this:—convict warders; (4) a supernumerary person appointed by the Board of Revenue under sect. 6, Act V. of 1863, (B. C.); (5) Naib Nazir; (6) a Patwari; (7) the Official Trustee of Bengal; (8) the Official Assignee of the Insolvent Court,(9) a Collector appointed to take charge of the estate of a minor under Act XX. of 1864; (10) or as agent for the Court of Wards under sect. 204, Act XIV. of 1873; (11) an officer in the Indian Staff Corps; (12) the Administrator-General of Bengal since the passing of the Administrator-General's Act of 1902.(13) A person nominated by the Collector under sect. 69 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, for the purpose of making a division of crops between the landlord and tenant, is not a public servant; (14) though a surveyor employed by the Collector in the Khas Mehal Department is.(15) A Cantonment Committee constituted under the Indian Cantonments Act (XIII. of 1889) has been held to be a public officer within the meaning of this clause.(16) than that assigned to it in the General Clauses Act, 1897, which is substantially the same as the first clause of this definition of the last Code. The second clause of that Code was first added in the amending Bill II. of 1878, on the ground that the use of a seal capable of producing an impression of the name and title of the person using it is common amongst people of rank in this country. The definition in the last Code after the word "stamped" added "with the name of the person referred to." The expression "person referred to" meant the person referred to in the subsequent sections of the Code, as being required to sign or verify certain documents, and it is not a condition precedent to such person being able to use a stamp that he should be unable to write his name.(1) As regards initialling, assuming that the person signing should, if able to write, write his name in full—and certainly it is proper that this should be done in the case of a warrant—it does not follow that because the signature on the warrant is confined to the initials of the name it was not the duty of the officer to execute it or that the debtor may forcibly resist its execution.(2)

Subordination of Courts.

3. For the purposes of this Code, the District Court is subordinate to the High Court; and every Civil Court of grade inferior to that of a District Court and every Court of small Causes is subordinate to the High Court and District Court.

Subordination.—See notes to sect. 2, ante, sub voc. "District Court." This enumeration of Subordinate Courts is not intended to be exhaustive.(3)

Savings.

4. (1) In the absence of any specific provision to the contrary nothing in this Code shall be deemed to limit or otherwise affect any special or local law now in force or any special jurisdiction or power conferred, or any special form of procedure prescribed, by or under any other law for the time being in force.

(2) In particular and without prejudice to the generality of the proposition contained in sub-section (1), nothing in this Code shall be deemed to limit or otherwise affect any remedy which a landholder or landlord may have under any law for the time being in force for the recovery of rent of agricultural land from the produce of such land.

Savings.—As originally drafted, the Civil Procedure Bill declared that nothing in the Code should affect (a) the Oudh Civil Courts Act (XIII. of 1879), the Oudh Courts Act (XIV. of 1891), the Punjab Courts Act (XVIII. of 1884), the Central Provinces Civil Courts Act (XVI. of 1885), the Lower Burma Courts Act (VI. of 1900), any law under the Indian Councils Acts (24 & 25 Vict

c. 67; 55 & 56 Vict. c. 14) prescribing a special procedure for suits between landholders and their tenants and agents, or for the partition of immoveable property; (b) the jurisdiction or procedure of village munsifs or panchayats in Madras, the Chief Court of Lower Burmah sitting as an Insolvent Court; (c) certain Bombay laws, viz. Reg. XIII. of 1830 (jurisdiction of jagirdars, etc.), Act XV. of 1840 (Agents of Foreign Sovereigns, etc.), and cases of the nature defined in the enactments specified in the third schedule of the draft. The Select Committee were, however, of opinion that those provisions, which were considered cumbrous, should be replaced by the following simpler and more comprehensive saving on the lines of that contained in sect. 1, sub-sect. 2 of the Criminal Procedure Code. "Provided that the procedure in cases tried by any Court in the exercise of any jurisdiction conferred by or under any of the enactments specified in the third schedule, and in appeals to the Civil Courts allowed therein, shall be in accordance with the provisions of this Code, save in so far as those provisions are inconsistent with the specific provisions of any of the enactments as aforesaid." They also added in their report, "The revenue laws of several provinces contain special provisions for the more speedy recovery of agricultural rent, to which, indeed, the produce of the land is, in several instances, declared to be hypothecated. The more general terms of the saving clause, as now proposed by us, would, we think, suffice to save such rights and remedies. At the same time, for the sake of greater clearness, we have inserted an express saving which is likely to save mistakes in practice." The words italicized have now been omitted, the Special Committee being of opinion that the section, as it now stands, effects all the savings covered by sect. 4 of the last Code. The concluding paragraph of that section has not been reproduced as it is stated to be obsolete.

"Affect."—The saving clause under the former Code was not meant to enact that the rules contained in the Code will not apply to the suits or other proceedings taken under the excepted enactments and laws, but that if there is anything in these Acts inconsistent with the Code, the latter does not prevail.(1) The suits between landholders and tenants referred to in this note are suits between landholders and their tenants, or between landholders and their tenants or agents, not between the tenants and agents. The Rent Recovery Act (Madras, Act VIII. of 1865) is such a law, and it follows that the special revisional powers given to the High Court by sect. 115, formerly 622, post, will not affect the provisions of that Act.(2) It was further held, in the case first mentioned, that although the Deputy Collector's proceedings were not strictly "proceedings under the Act," but rather "proceedings taken under colour of the Act," that circumstance alone would not give a jurisdiction which this section was designed to exclude. The Chota Nagpore Landlord and Tenant Procedure Act (Bengal, Act I. of 1879) is covered by this section, which having regard to the provisions of that Act bars the application of sect. 100 (formerly 584), post. No second appeal therefore lies in a suit for arrears of rent brought under the provisions of that Act.(3)

As already stated, the section saves suits under laws passed under the Indian Councils Acts, providing for the partition of immoveable property. The word "property" in its strict sense is a right, but is used also to denote the subject or rather the object of that right, and when so used may be looked upon as synonymous with "a thing." In ordinary language, that word has the widest extent, including every species of acquisition in which an individual may have an interest or right, as lands, goods, chattels and effects.(1) But where the right is common to all, it is not the subject of property, as in the case of the right of the public to fish in the open sea.(2) The distinction between moveable and immoveable property is not coincident with the English law division as to lands and chattels, or real and personal property. For property according to English law may be immoveable yet personal, as in the case of leaseholds, or moveable and real, as in the case of dignities and titles of honour. Further, things physically moveable may be considered immoveable in law.

In the Code as well as in the other Acts of the Indian Legislation, unless there be something repugnant in the subject or context, the term "immoveable property" includes "land (including land covered by water), benefits to arise out of land (such as rents, annuities, and other incorporeal hereditaments), and things 'attached to the earth,' which is defined in the Transfer of Property Act to mean: (a) rooted in the earth, as in the case of trees and shrubs (but as to growing crops, vide ante); (b) embedded in the earth, as in the case of walls or buildings; (c) attached to what is so embedded (for the permanent beneficial enjoyment of that to which it is attached), or permanently fastened to anything attached to the earth." (3) The term "moveable property" means property of every description except immoveable property,(4) and under sect. 2, clause 13, includes growing crops.

Application of the Code to Revenue Courts.

5. (1) Where any Revenue Courts are governed by the provisions of this Code in those matters of procedure upon which any special enactment applicable to them is silent, the Local Government, with the previous sanction of the Governor General in Council, may, by notification in the local official Gazette, declare that any portions of those provisions which are not expressly made applicable by this Code shall not apply to those Courts, or shall only apply to them with such modifications as the Local Government, with the sanction aforesaid, may prescribe.

(2) "Revenue Court" in sub-section (1) means a Court having jurisdiction under any local law to entertain suits or other proceedings relating to the rent, revenue or profits of land used for agricultural purposes, but does not include a Civil Court having original jurisdiction under this Code to try such suits or proceedings as being suits or proceedings of a civil nature.

Object of section.—This section was first added by sect. 3, Act VII. of 1888, and in presenting the report of the Select Committee on the final draft of the Bill, which was passed into that Act, Sir Andrew Scoble said, "The object is to preserve the summary character of rent litigation under local laws; and it is justified on the ground that holding the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code to be applicable to the proceedings of the Rent and Revenue Courts, in all points which are not provided for in the special Acts governing these classes of Courts, may be the source of considerable embarrassment to the Administration, both by throwing impediments in the way of the easy realization of the rents from which the land revenue is paid and imposing increased labour on the Rent Courts, whose time is already fully occupied." As to Revenue Courts generally, see notes to Preamble, ante.

Pecuniary jurisdiction.

6. Save in so far as is otherwise expressly provided, nothing herein contained shall operate to give any Court jurisdiction over suits the amount or value of the subject-matter of which exceeds the pecuniary limits (if any) of its ordinary jurisdiction.

Jurisdiction.—In view of the extended scope of sect. 4 of the present Code the reproduction of sects. 6 and 7 of the last Code (except as to the final paragraph which is the present section) has been considered unnecessary. The original section was first introduced into the Code of 1877, and was held by the Calcutta and Bombay High Courts to operate to limit the jurisdiction conferred by sect. 223 of the former Code (see sects. 38, 39, 41, O. XXI. rr. 4, 5), relating to the Courts by which a decree may be executed, there being no provision in the Code which could, if uncontrolled by this clause, have operated to give a Court jurisdiction to try a suit (assuming such term to be limited to proceedings before and up to decree) in excess of the limits of its pecuniary jurisdiction. It was proposed to introduce the words "or proceedings in suits" to negative the view that a Court to which a decree is sent for execution has jurisdiction to execute the decree though the amount exceeds the limits of the previous jurisdiction of the Court, a point on which there was a conflict of opinion.(1) See note to sect. 36, O. XX. r. 12. But these words have been omitted.

Provincial Small Cause Courts.

7. The following provisions shall not extend to Courts constituted under the Provincial Small Causes Courts Act, 1887, or to Courts exercising the jurisdiction of a Court of Small Causes under that Act, that is to say,—

(a) so much of the body of the Code as relates to—

(i) suits excepted from the cognizance of a Court of Small Causes;

(ii) the execution of decrees in such suits;

(iii) the execution of decrees against immoveable property; and

(b) the following sections, that is to say,—

sections 91 and 92, sections 94 and 95 so far as they relate to injunctions and interlocutory orders, and sections 96 to 112 and 115.

Provincial Small Cause Courts.—Section 17 of the Provincial Small Cause Court Act provides that the procedure prescribed in the Chapters and sections of the former Code, specified in the schedule, should, so far as those Chapter and sections were applicable, be the procedure followed in a Court of Small Causes in all suits cognizable by it, and in all proceedings arising out of such suits: provided that an applicant for an order to set aside a decree passed ex parte, or for a review of judgment, shall, at the time of presenting his application, either deposit in the Court the amount due from him under the decree or in pursuance of the judgment, or give security to the satisfaction of the Court for the performance of the decree or compliance with the judgment, as the Court may direct. And where a person has become liable as surety under this proviso the security may be realized in manner provided by sect. 253 (cf. now sect. 145), post. The provisions of the former section have been arranged in a more convenient form. The wording of the section makes it clear, that the Courts on which Small Cause jurisdiction has been conferred are to exercise that jurisdiction according to the procedure provided for Small Cause Courts. As to the rules, see O. L.

Presidency Small Cause Courts.

8. Save as provided in sections 24, 38 to 41, 75, clauses (a), (b) and (c), 76, 77 and 155 to 158, and by the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, 1882, the provisions in the body of this Code shall not extend to any suit or proceeding in any Court of Small Causes established in the towns of Calcutta, Madras and Bombay.

Presidency Small Cause Courts.—This section provides that certain sections of the Code shall apply. Sect. 23 of Act XV. of 1882 extended certain portions of the Code specified in the second schedule to that Act to Presidency Small Cause Courts. That section and schedule were repealed by sect. 12 of the Amending Act I. of 1895. By sect. 5 of the latter Act the High Court may from time to time, by rules having the force of law, prescribe the procedure to be followed and the practice to be observed by the Small Cause Court either in supersession of or in addition to any provisions prescribed on or before December 31, 1894, and may cancel or vary any such rules. The law and any rules and declarations made thereunder, with respect to procedure or practice in force on that date, is in force unless and until cancelled or varied by rules made by the High Court under sect. 5 of Act I. of 1895. The High Court has made certain rules under which portions of the Code mentioned in the schedule annexed to the rules, with such modifications as are indicated in that schedule, are extended to the Calcutta Court of Small Causes to be applied with due regard to the other rules prescribed. This section, as it formerly stood in the earlier Code, contained a second paragraph authorizing the Local Government, by notification published in the Official Gazette, to extend to the Presidency Small Cause Court certain portions of the Code. This was repealed by the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act.(1) As to the Rules, see O. LI.

PART I.

SUITS IN GENERAL.

JURISDICTION OF THE COURTS AND RES JUDICATA.

9. The Courts shall (subject to the provisions herein contained) have jurisdiction to try all suits of a civil nature excepting suits of which their cognizance is either expressly or impliedly barred.

Courts to try all civil suits unless barred.

Explanation.—A suit in which the right to property or to an office is contested is a suit of a civil nature, notwithstanding that such right may depend entirely on the decision of questions as to religious rites or ceremonies.

"The Courts."—The original side of the High Court is a Court within the meaning of sect. 9, and there is no enactment barring its jurisdiction to entertain a suit to set aside, on the ground of fraud, a decree passed by another Court of concurrent jurisdiction.(1)

"Provisions herein contained."—Reference may be made to those contained in sects. 10, 11, 47; O. IX. r. 9, in which the bar of a suit is absolute, and to sects. 83, 84, 86, in which the bar is of a conditional or provisional character. As regards the Government, Minors, Lunatics, Charities, see sects. 79, 92, 93, and O. XXXII., post.

Suit.—As to the meaning of this term, see notes to sect. 2, ante, "Decree."

Jurisdiction generally.—To constitute jurisdiction there must be in the first place authority to judge at all. If a Judge is not legally appointed, all his judgments, decrees and orders, are ultra vires and illegal, and he (or the Bench of which he is one, if the proceeding cannot be heard by a single Judge) has no jurisdiction to entertain any judicial proceeding.(2) But if a person has in all respects acted as Judge, that fact is presumptive proof, until the contrary be shown, of his due appointment to act as a Judge of the Court.(1) If a Judge is validly appointed but is disqualified from trying a suit by reason of his personal interest in it,(2) the judgment is erroneous and voidable but not void.(3)

(2) R. v. Ganga Ram, 16 A. 136, 156 (1894). The validity of the appointment, under the High Courts Act, 1861, of Burkitt, J., which was there in question, was again raised before the Privy Council in Bulwant Singh v. Rani Kishori, 20 A. 267, 293 (1897). See also Glyn v. Bonnaud, 2 Tayl. & Bell, 205, 224; as to appearance of Judge on rule to show cause for want of jurisdiction, see R. v. Judge Marylebone County Court, 50 L. T. 97. Where a rule was obtained upon a Judge who held that he had no jurisdiction, to show cause

Assuming the existence of official authority and the absence of any disqualification; the next question is as to the jurisdiction to deal with the various matters which, in the exercise of his general judicial authority, are brought before the Judge for his determination.

Jurisdiction, when used in its general sense with reference to a Court of Justice, means the power or authority of judging, and that Court is said to be of competent (4) jurisdiction with regard to a suit or other proceeding, when it has power to hear or determine it or to exercise any judicial power therein.(5) "Jurisdiction," said West, J.,(6) "according to the exact conception of it formed by the Roman lawyers, consists in taking cognizance of a case involving the determination of some jural relation, in ascertaining the essential points of it, and in pronouncing upon them." The word, however, is commonly used in two different senses: an use which has led to much confusion. It is sometimes used to mean jurisdiction in the ordinary sense above mentioned, that is, when used with reference to local or pecuniary jurisdiction or with reference to the parties,(7) or jurisdiction with reference to the subject-matter (8) of a suit. It is also used to mean the legal authority of a Court to do certain things. Thus it has been said that if a Court has "jurisdiction" to why he should not hear the case, it was stated that it was not usual for a Judge to be represented in a rule unless the whole jurisdiction of his Court was in question: R. v. Judge Marylebone County Court, 50 L. T. 97; as in the case of Mackonochie v. Penzance, 6 App. Cas. 424.

(2) The principle nemo debet esse judex in propria causa is one of general application apart from legislative enactment; but this disqualification is expressly provided for by s. 38, Act XII. of 1887 (Bengal Civil Courts); s. 17, Act III. of 1873 (Madras Civil Courts); s. 23, Act XIII. of 1879 (Oudh Civil Courts). See Hukm Chand, Res Jud. 380. A Judge, however, is not disqualified from trying a suit to which his Government is a party: Bikrama Singh v. Bir Singh, 1888, P. R. No. 191; Aloo Nathu v. Gagubha Dipsangji, 19 B. 608 (1894). (8) It is used in this sense in Ledgard v. Bull, 9 A. 191, 203 (1886); Sadasiva v. Ramalinga, 2 I. A. 219, 233 (1875); Hurronath Roy v. Scott, B. L. R., F. B., 636 (1867).

make a remand, that term being used in the former sense, then it is only in the latter sense that an erroneous order of remand can be treated as an order made without jurisdiction.(1) Further difficulty has been introduced, it having been held that the same term may mean one thing in one section of the Code and another thing in another. So the term, it has been held,(2) is used in its former sense in sect. 99 (formerly 578), that is, in the sense of local and pecuniary jurisdiction and jurisdiction with reference to the subject-matter, while the same term in sect. 115 (formerly 622), may, it is said, well be taken to have been used in a more comprehensive sense.(3) The term in this section is used in the first of the senses above mentioned.

The judgment or order of a Court without jurisdiction in this last-mentioned sense is void and a mere nullity.(4) Jurisdiction derives from the Sovereign, and in British India has been conferred by the Charters and Letters Patent of the High Courts, and as regards other Courts by various Acts of the Legislature constituting those Courts, giving them powers and regulating their procedure.(5)

This jurisdiction may be of different kinds: (a) over the parties; (b) over the subject-matter; (c) local; (d) pecuniary. Peculiar powers may be given to particular Courts whilst other Courts may be of restricted jurisdiction. But no Court has power to give judgment respecting a matter not submitted to it for decision, even in a suit involving other matters which have been so submitted.(6)

The distinction must be kept between jurisdiction and errors in the exercise of jurisdiction. The proceedings of a Court having jurisdiction over the subject-matter and parties are not void, however erroneous they may be. A judgment is not void simply because it is erroneous. This is evident from the very notion of jurisdiction, which is the power to determine and not

[So it has been said that the Judicial Committee in Amir Hasan Khan v. Sheo Baksh Singh, 11 C. 6 (1884), used the term "jurisdiction," not in the sense that the Judicial Commissioner had no jurisdiction in the first sense of the word to entertain an application for revision, for he had the same powers as the High Court, but that he had exceeded his legal authority and that the order was ultra vires: Har Prasad v. Jafar Ali, 7 A. 350 (1885). (4) See Authors' Evidence Act, 5th ed., note to s. 44, where the question of competency, fraud and collusion, as affecting judgments, is dealt with, and Hukm Chand, Res Jud. 397, 484. A Court may, however, always inquire as to whether jurisdiction exists. This is not an exercise of jurisdiction over the case itself, but an investigation of another question, that of whether the conditions of cognizance are satisfied: Amritrav v. Balkrishna, 11 B. 488 (1887); Huree Prosad v. Koonjo Behary, 1 Marsh, 99, 101 (1862); Nasrun v. Watson, 3 W. merely the power to determine rightly.(1) So in the under-mentioned case the Privy Council held that a judicial sale was not a nullity and could not be treated as invalid, notwithstanding irregularity even though a material one, for the jurisdiction of the Court to execute had been complete throughout. It had not been lost by reason of an error in treating a particular person as the legal representative of the judgment-debtor's estate, the Court having power to decide wrongly as well as rightly.(2)

It is a general principle, that whenever jurisdiction is given to a Court by an enactment, and such jurisdiction is only given on certain specified terms contained in the enactment itself, these terms must be complied with in order to create and raise the jurisdiction, for if they are not complied with the jurisdiction does not arise.(3)

Consent cannot give jurisdiction, which is absent as regards the subject-matter,(4) nor probably as regards local or pecuniary (5) jurisdiction. When the Judge has no inherent jurisdiction over the subject-matter of a suit, the parties cannot by their mutual consent convert it into a proper judicial process, although they may constitute the Judge their arbiter and be bound by his decision on the merits when these are submitted to him.(6)

(1) Hukm Chand, Res Judicata, 473, 482; so where the Court has power to grant relief of a particular kind, an error in giving too much or not enough is never void, so long as it does not exceed its possible power in any cause of the general class to which the one under consideration belongs, ib. 456. So a Court could give judgment on an award unless under the provisions of s. 521 of the last Code: Raja Har Narain Singh v. Chaudhrain Bhagwant Kuar, 13 A. 300 (1891); or admit a review after ninety days without being satisfied that there is sufficient cause as directed by the Limitation Act: Luchman Singh v. Shumshere Singh, 2 I. (5) See Hukm Chand, Res Judicata, 411, 412, where it is stated that the question as to the waiver of local jurisdiction has not yet received an authoritative decision in India. In Velayudam v. Arunachala, 13 M. 273 (1889), it was held that there was no waiver of pecuniary jurisdiction; but the matter was one really not of jurisdiction but procedure. See Gourachandra v. Vikrama, 23 M. 367 (1899). In Gurdeo Singh v. Chandrikah Singh, 5 C. L. J. 611, 623 (1907), the term "subject-matter" appears to have been used in contradistinction to the other elements analysed.

Where, however, the Court has jurisdiction over the subject-matter and over the person, and a defendant has some privilege which exempts him from the jurisdiction, such privilege may, it has been said, be waived.(1) So where the objection to the jurisdiction was based on the ground of the defendant being a Sirdar of the Dekhan, who as such was not subject to the jurisdiction of the Munsif's Court which passed the decree, it was held that the defendant must be taken to have waived the want of jurisdiction and that it was too late to raise it when the decree was sought to be executed.(2) And there are numerous authorities which establish that when, in a cause which the Judge is competent to try, the parties, without objection, join issue and go to trial upon the merits, the defendant cannot subsequently dispute his jurisdiction upon the grounds that there are irregularities in the initial procedure which, if objected to at the time, would have led to the dismissal of the suit.(3)

Under the former Codes it was held that an objection to jurisdiction might be raised at any stage of a suit, even after remand by the High Court in second appeal,(4) and that the Court would receive and adjudicate a point of jurisdiction though not taken in the lower Court, because acts done without jurisdiction are acts of no legal effect at all and might be set aside.(1) At the same time it was said that though the question of jurisdiction might be taken for the first time on appeal, yet if the want of jurisdiction did not appear upon the pleadings, evidence or admissions of the parties, the Court would not, upon a mere suggestion, remand the case to ascertain further facts in order that the question of jurisdiction might be considered.(2) The objection should be raised in the course of the proceedings. He who having an appeal and a special appeal on a question of jurisdiction, has not availed himself of those remedies, renunciavit juri pro se introducto. An omission to urge objections there is to be treated when the proceedings have been completed as conclusive.(3) When no objection to the jurisdiction of the first Court was raised in the grounds of a regular appeal and the first Appellate Court declined to hear the question argued, it was held that the objection should have been considered and decided.(4) The present Code, however, enacts that no objection to jurisdiction ("place of suing") shall be allowed in any appeal or revision unless taken in the Court of first instance before settlement of issues (sect. 21, post).

If a party protest against jurisdiction he is not bound to retire; he can go through the case subject to protest.(5) If an objection to jurisdiction is first taken at a late stage of the suit, and the jurisdiction is doubtful, the proper course is to proceed to determine the suit.(6) As to the form of the order where an objection to jurisdiction is raised and allowed, see notes to O. VII. r. 10. In some cases a party has been held to be estopped from proving want of jurisdiction in a subsequent suit (7) or in further proceedings.(8)

Subject-matter.—Jurisdiction over the subject-matter primarily depends on the nature of the cause of action alleged and of the relief asked. It is not however the existence of a cause of action which constitutes the subject-matter, but the allegation of such existence.(9) Nor is the subject-matter of a suit necessarily identical with the property to which the suit relates. The subject-matter of a suit is generally the specific thing sought in it. In a suit for damages for injuring a carriage the subject-matter would in one sense be the carriage, but the object of the suit would be the amount demanded. Where there is no material property concerned, as in a suit for slander, the subject-matter cannot be identified with a tangible thing. Where, on the other hand, the claim is for a particular field, that field as a material object is sought and is regarded as the subject-matter of the suit. These meanings of the term are not inconsistent. They are reconciled by saying that the field is the subject-matter in so far as it is conceived as embraced in the command or adjudication sought. Hence what is sought is the true measure of the subject-matter, not what the suit is about in a wider and vaguer sense.(1) It has been recently held by a Full Bench of the Bombay High Court, that where the main purpose of a suit was to determine a right to immoveable property, a Small Cause Court had nevertheless jurisdiction to entertain it if the relief asked was not for immoveable property, but for payment of a sum of money.(2)

In every suit the plaintiff advances two matters for determination:—whether ground exists for resorting to the Court for aid, and if it does, the relief claimed as due. Neither of these matters alone is the subject-matter of the suit, to the exclusion of the other, since each alike is matter necessary to be determined in the suit before a decree can be granted to the plaintiff.(3) Nor can the nature of the defendant's plea affect the jurisdiction acquired by a Court over the plaintiff's claim.(4) Even an equitable claim of set-off, to which O. VIII. r. 6, post, does not apply, will not be taken cognizance of by a Court if it is in excess of its pecuniary jurisdiction, though that circumstance will not affect the jurisdiction of the Court over the suit itself.(5) Jurisdiction over the subject-matter must exist throughout the proceedings in the suit. Jurisdiction must exist at the time of its institution as well as at that of its disposal.(6) The decision in Shamrav v. Niloji (7) is not against this view, as the decision is grounded on the circumstance that jurisdiction in proceedings taken for the execution of a decree is by law not made to depend on the amount in respect of which the execution is taken, but on the amount claimed in the suit in which the decree was given.(8) as well as a local original jurisdiction embracing matters civil as well as criminal. It executed its own writs and processes throughout the provinces and districts annexed to and made subject to the Presidency of Fort William, such provinces and districts being within the limits of its general jurisdiction.

The jurisdiction of the High Court is, in some respects, analogous to that of the Supreme Court; but is, in other respects, wholly dissimilar. It has an Appellate Jurisdiction, as extensive as that possessed by the late Sudder Court, which it never exercises for the purpose of enforcing its decrees or orders, the same being enforced through the subordinate Courts: and it has an Extraordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction, and also an Extraordinary Original Criminal Jurisdiction, peculiar to itself. It has, besides, a Civil Jurisdiction, a Criminal Jurisdiction, an Admiralty and Vice-admiralty Jurisdiction, a Testamentary and Intestate Jurisdiction, and a Matrimonial Jurisdiction. Sects. 11 and 12 of the Letters Patent, constituting the High Court, relate to its Original Civil Jurisdiction; sect. 13 to its Extraordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction; sects. 21 and 22 to its Ordinary Original Criminal Jurisdiction; sect. 23 to its Extraordinary Original Criminal Jurisdiction; sects. 31 and 32 to its Admiralty and Vice-admiralty Jurisdiction; sects. 33 and 34 to its Testamentary and Intestate Jurisdiction; sect. 35 to its Matrimonial Jurisdiction; and sects. 24, 15, and 16 to its Appellate Jurisdiction. Its Ordinary Civil Jurisdiction, unlike the Jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, is merely local; as is also its Matrimonial Jurisdiction. Its Extraordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction is to try and determine any suit being or falling within the jurisdiction of any Court, whether within or without the Bengal Division of the Presidency of Fort William, subject to its superintendence, when it shall think proper to do so, either on the agreement of the parties to that effect, or for the purposes of justice. Its Ordinary Original Criminal Jurisdiction is both local and general, and is in all respects the same as that exercised by the Supreme Court on its Crown side. Its Extraordinary Original Criminal Jurisdiction is over all persons residing in places within the jurisdiction of any Court, formerly subject to the superintendence of the Sudder Nizamut Adawlut at Calcutta, whether within or without the Bengal Division of the Presidency of Fort William; and, in the exercise of this jurisdiction, it has authority to try, at its discretion, any such persons brought before it on charges preferred by the Advocate-General, or by any Magistrate, or other officer, specially appointed by the Government in that behalf. Its Admiralty and Vice-admiralty Jurisdiction is the same as that exercised by the Supreme Court on its Admiralty side, and by the late Vice-admiralty Court. Its Testamentary and Intestate Jurisdiction is the same as that exercised by the Supreme Court on its Ecclesiastical side. As regards the Original Civil Jurisdiction of the Court, sect. 2 of the Letters Patent provides that "the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, shall have, and exercise, Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction, within such local limits as may, from time to time, be declared and prescribed by any law or regulation, made by the Governor-General in Council, and, until some local limits shall be so declared, and prescribed, within the limits declared and prescribed by the Proclamation fixing the limits of Calcutta issued by the Governor-General in Council, on the 10th day of September, 1794, and the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of the said High Court shall not extend beyond the limits, for the time being declared and prescribed, as the local limits of such jurisdiction." As no law or regulation has been made by the Governor-General in Council, declaring and prescribing local limits, within which the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of the Court is to be exercised, the limits of the town of Calcutta are the present limits within which jurisdiction is to be exercised.(1)

Certain Courts are of limited but exclusive jurisdiction, such as the Presidency and Provincial (Act IX. of 1887) Small Cause Courts, which have limited jurisdiction of an exclusive character over certain classes of suits for money or moveable property, which may be tried summarily and which on that ground are excluded from the jurisdiction of the ordinary Civil Courts. There are, however, numerous rulings to the effect that the nature of a suit is not changed because a question of title is incidentally raised in it.(2) As to other Courts of exclusive jurisdiction, see post, "Either expressly or impliedly barred." As regards the valuation of the subject-matter as giving jurisdiction, see "Pecuniary Jurisdiction," post.

Just as sect. 9 of the last Code enacted that no person should be exempted from the jurisdiction, so as regards subject-matter sect. 10 enacted that, subject to the provisions of the Code and other enactments to which reference will be made, no civil cause is exempted from the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts (vide post). Generally speaking, with the exception of Small Cause Courts (3) and Revenue Courts (4) the jurisdiction (subject to the conditions mentioned in sect. 10) as regards the subject-matter is not limited, though the power to take cognizance of a particular suit may be affected by its value. So though a Munsif in Bengal may try all suits cognizable by Civil Courts, he can only do so in the case of suits the value of which usually does not exceed 1000 rupees.

(a) Local jurisdiction.—The jurisdiction of a Court, apart from statutory power, can only be exercised over persons who are within its territorial limits.(5) For the exercise of judicial power this country is divided and subdivided into small local areas, varying for different grades of Courts and generally liable to a change by the Executive Government.(6)

The limits of these areas determine the local limits of the Courts' jurisdiction for the trial of original suits and appeals. Personal jurisdiction depends on the place of residence or business of the defendant. The former for transitory actions, that is, actions which are brought on occurrences which happen anywhere, depends on whether the cause of action or part of the cause of action arose within the local limits of the jurisdiction, and for local actions or actions relating to immoveable property or for the recovery of moveable property actually under distraint or attachment, depends on the situation of the property within the local jurisdiction. The case of moveable property attached or under distraint is an exception to the general rule that personal property has no locality, by which it is not meant that it has no visible locality, but that it follows the person and is governed by the law which governs him.(1) The exception in the Code (2) is probably founded on the fact that in the case given the situs of the moveable property is fixed and cannot be altered by any person at his pleasure, and, perhaps, also for the convenience of judicial administration. The limits of these different areas determine the local limits of the Courts' jurisdiction for the trial of suits and appeals. The difficulty exists in what has been fitly described as the localization of suits, and rules have therefore been enacted by the Legislature for determining the circumstances in which a suit may be taken cognizance of by the Courts having jurisdiction in any particular area.

Clause 12 of the Letters Patent determine the ordinary original jurisdiction of the Presidency High Courts, the High Court at Allahabad having no ordinary original civil jurisdiction.(3) There has, however, been considerable conflict of opinion as to the several essentials of jurisdiction for which provision has been made by these Charters,(4) chiefly as to the nature of "suits for land." To avoid such differences of opinion in the Provincial Courts, the Code, in sects. 16–20, post, makes detailed provisions as regards jurisdiction, and in any case governed by those sections there can hardly be any difference as to the character of the local suits, to which the principle of territorial jurisdiction must be held to apply. These provisions, as also those contained in the Charters, are dealt with in the Notes to those sections.

It has been held that a Court has no jurisdiction to hear and decide a suit or appeal within its jurisdiction and cognizable by it, if it is instituted in a Court not having such jurisdiction,(5) even though it may be transferred to it by higher judicial authority. The Calcutta Court has held (6) that it

Equity, which were always unfettered by local venue, entertained suits affecting lands abroad. See Companhia de Mocambique v. British South Africa Company, 1892, 2 Q. B. 58. could direct the transfer of an appeal only from a Court having jurisdictio to receive and try it, and that decision was approved of by the Judicia Committee.(1)

As to the jurisdiction over proceedings in execution of a decree, see sect 38, post.

An appeal cannot be heard upon the merits unless the decree from whic the appeal was preferred was passed by a Judge having jurisdiction over th matter in dispute. The Appellate Court is only a Court of Error, and th trial by an Appellate Court cannot be accepted in place of a trial b the Court of first instance.(2) But though the Appellate Court canno entertain the appeal on the merits where a Subordinate Court has no juris diction over the trial of a suit or appeal, the Appellate Court authorized t hear appeals from that Subordinate Court has power as such to set aside it proceedings on an appeal.(3) So where a defendant appealed from th Deputy Collector to the District Judge and the plaintiff then appealed to th High Court, upon an objection to the hearing of the appeal, on the groun that as no appeal lay to the District Judge à fortiori no appeal lay to the Higl Court, the objection was overruled and the High Court reversed the decree o the District Judge and restored that of the first Court.(4) As to the effect o absence of objection to jurisdiction, see sect. 21, post.

(b) Personal jurisdiction.—As already stated, jurisdiction is conferrec by the various Charters and Letters Patent and Acts of the Legislature, t which recourse must be had, to determine the extent of jurisdiction in th case of any particular suit and Court. And such jurisdiction may be con sidered with reference to the (a) parties, (b) subject-matter, (c) local, and (d) pecuniary limits.

In the first place this section and sect. 10 of the last Code enact genera rules which are applicable to all Civil Courts.

Their effect may be generally, though succinctly, expressed in the language of Garth, C.J., in a case in which the defendant was master of an Italian vessel: (5) "There is no doubt whatever that by the law of this country, which is the same in that respect as the law of England, Civil Courts as a general rule, have jurisdiction to try all civil suits against all persons of any nationality within the local limits of their jurisdiction."

Sect. 10 of the last Code dealt with jurisdiction over persons. Prior to 1850, Courts presided over by native officers were not competent to take cognizance of suits to which Europeans or Americans were parties. The Code of 1859 enacted the same rule as that contained in sect. 10 of the last Code. The

In the case cited in the last note, as it was held that neither of the lower Courts had jurisdiction, the High Court set aside the decrees of both Courts, dismissed the suit, and directed that the plaint be returned for presentation in the proper Court. In these cases there is merely an inquiry as to whether jurisdiction exists. As it is open to the first Court to make such inquiry, so can the Appeal Court if the former errs. provisions contained in that section were first enacted by Act XI. of 1836, and were reproduced in the Code of 1859, and in subsequent Codes. Their retention has been considered no longer necessary, the principle of law which it embodied having been sufficiently established.

The repeal of sect. 151 of the Army Act by 51 & 52 Vict. c. 4, s. 6, has removed the limitation on the general jurisdiction of Civil Courts in regard to suits for debt against officers holding the King's Commission.(1) There are particular enactments (2) exempting from the ordinary jurisdiction particular persons or classes of persons, and sect. 86, post, contains special provisions relating to princes, chiefs, ambassadors and envoys. There was nothing, however, in sect. 10 which affected such personal exemptions, as they were not on the ground of descent or place of birth, but by virtue of special enactments.

The exemption of independent foreign Sovereigns from the jurisdiction of all Civil Courts is, as a general rule, universally admitted.(3) As to the conditions in which protected independent native princes may be sued, see sect. 86, post. "It is an attribute of sovereignty and an universal law that a State cannot be sued in its own Courts without its consent." (4) A Sovereign State may, however, bring and maintain a suit as any other suitor. As to suits by foreign States, see sects. 84, 87, post. In India, however, the Government, unlike the Crown, can be and is often sued. And this is so on account of the original trading character of the East India Company, who in course of time acquired the Government of India, and from whom the late Queen took over the Government. The statute 21 & 22 Vict. c. 106, which transferred to the Crown the possession and government of the British territories in India, expressly provided for a continuance of both the nature and the extent of liabilities with which the revenues of India in the Company's hands were chargeable. As the Crown could, however, not be sued as the East India Company could have been, in her own Courts, it was enacted by sect. 65 that the Secretary of State in Council should and might sue and be sued as a Body Corporate and that all persons might have the same remedies against the Secretary of State as they could have done against the East India

(2) These exemptions generally have reference to the head or members of certain families which ruled tracts of country since conquered by the British Government. Reference, for instance, may be made to s. 2, Act XIII. of 1868; s. 11, Act XVII. of 1863, relating to the consent of the Governor-General to suits against the ex-King of Oudh and the Nawab Nazim of Bengal; to s. 2, Act XX. of 1873; s. 1, Act XXXVII. of 1858, which enact the same with reference to the Prince of Arcot and certain members of the family of the late Nawab of the Carnatic named in the Act, the consent required being that of the Governor of Madras; to Act XVIII. of 1848, which enacts the same with respect to certain members and servants of the family of the late Nawab of Surat named in the Act, the consent required being that of the Governor of Bombay.

Company, and that the property and effects thereby vested in the Crown for the purposes of the Government of India, or acquired for the said purposes, should be subject and liable to the same judgments and executions as they would, while vested in the Company, have been liable to in respect of debts and liabilities lawfully contracted and incurred by the Company. It may therefore be generally said that the liability of the Secretary of State to be sued depends on that of the East India Company, and the liability alleged must be one incurred on account of the Government of India.(1) But as the latter could not be, therefore the Secretary of State cannot be, sued for all its acts. The Company, though established originally for purposes of trade, acquired in time sovereign powers.(2) Therefore acts done in the execution of these sovereign powers were not subject to the control of the Municipal Courts.(3) Though the principle is well established, there is some conflict of opinion as to what acts are to be deemed acts of State, and therefore beyond the cognizance of the Civil Courts.(4) The meaning of an "act of State" has been defined by the Privy Council to be "something which appertains to the functions of Government." (5)

Several Indian Acts exempt from the jurisdiction of Civil Courts various acts of executive and revenue officers done in discharge of the work of administration. See, for instance, Act IX. of 1859, relating to the claims to property seized as forfeited, and post, "Subject-matter." The exemption in some cases only extends to certain Courts or classes of Courts.(6)

the suit, whether their presence is temporary or permanent. As regards non-resident foreigners, Plowden, J., in Bikrama Singh v. Bir Singh,(1) said: "There is certainly, so far as I can ascertain, no rule of international jurisprudence universally recognized that a Municipal Court is absolutely incompetent to exercise jurisdiction over a non-resident foreigner, and it is certain that in many, if not in most, countries the Municipal law authorizes the exercise of jurisdiction in such cases by its own Courts, subject, generally speaking, to the condition that notice, actual or constructive, be given to the absent defendant. For instance, the Code of Civil Procedure (sect. 10 of the last Code) enacted that no person should, by reason of his descent or place of birth, be, in any civil proceeding, exempt from the jurisdiction of any of the Courts, and in sect. 89 (now O. V. r. 25) the Code provides for service of summons out of the jurisdiction, while sect. 17 (now sect. 20) authorizes the Court to take cognizance of certain suits when the cause of action has arisen within the jurisdiction." It appears, however, to be generally agreed upon, that even the personal service of a summons on a non-resident foreigner at his foreign domicile can create no jurisdiction so as to render the judgment enforceable in the Courts of any other State,(2) inasmuch as no Sovereignty can extend its powers beyond its own territorial limits to subject either persons or property to its judicial decision. And there is no principle for holding that the mere possession of property in the foreign country would, by reason of the protection enjoyed, confer on the Courts of that country jurisdiction over a foreigner neither domiciled nor resident therein, in respect of matters unconnected with the property.(3) Whilst every tribunal may execute process against property within its jurisdiction, existence of such property affords no sufficient ground for imposing on the foreign owner of that property a duty or obligation to fulfil the judgment.(4) See, further, as to personal jurisdiction and residence, sects. 19 and 20, post, and notes thereon.

No sort of jurisdiction can be obtained against one who was dead when the suit was commenced against him as a defendant or in his name as plaintiff, and a judgment for or against him must necessarily be void.(5) If a suit is once validly commenced in any Court, jurisdiction is not taken away by the change of residence or country by the defendant, and the weight of authority is in favour of the view that jurisdiction is not divested by death of either party after the institution of the suit, and a judgment rendered after a party's death, though erroneous, is voidable and not void.(6) not to affect special legislation, such as that which has been provided for the care of the persons and property of minors.(1)

(c) Pecuniary jurisdiction.—Throughout the country there are Courts of different grades having jurisdiction in suits of different amounts in certain prescribed local areas. In determining, therefore, whether any Court has jurisdiction over any particular suit, regard must be had not only to the nature of the suit but also to the pecuniary extent of the Court's jurisdiction, which are to be found in the various Acts under which the Courts are constituted.

The only limit upon the original jurisdiction of the Presidency High Courts is the exclusion of cases falling within the jurisdiction of the Presidency Small Cause Courts, in which the debt or damage or value of the property sued for does not exceed 100 rupees.

In the case of the Courts governed by the Bengal, N. W. P. and Assam Civil Courts Act (XII. of 1887), the jurisdiction of a District Judge or Subordinate Judge extends, subject to the provisions of sect. 15 of the Code (which provisions have been held not to affect jurisdiction but to be matter of procedure only (2)), to all original suits for the time being cognizable by Civil Courts. The jurisdiction of a Munsif, unless extended by notification, is limited to like suits, the value of which does not exceed 1000 rupees.(3) The Bombay Civil Courts Act (XIV. of 1869) provides for District, Joint, Assistant, and Subordinate Judges, the latter of whom are of two classes. The jurisdiction of the first class extends to all suits, and of the second to suits and proceedings of which the subject-matter does not exceed in amount or value 5000 rupees.(4)

The Oudh Civil Courts are governed by Act XIII. of 1879. There are four grades of Courts: The Judicial Commissioner and District Judge, who have appellate jurisdiction, and the latter original jurisdiction also, and Subordinate Judges and Munsifs, whose jurisdiction, subject to notification, is 10,000 rupees and 1000 rupees respectively.(5)

Every suit must be instituted in the Court of the lowest grade competent to try it.(6) What primâ facie determines the jurisdiction is the claim or subject-matter of the claim, as estimated by the plaintiff, and this determination having given the jurisdiction, the jurisdiction itself continues whatever the event of the suit, unless a different principle comes into operation to prevent such a result or to make the proceedings from the first abortive.(7)

The subject-matter and value of a suit is determined by the plaintiff's statement of demand. Jurisdiction is not affected by the defendant's plea, it being a fundamental principle that competence is determined by the plaintiff's demand and not by the defendant's answer, which only impugns the existence of the demand but does not alter or affect its nature.(1) It is the claim therefore and not the defence which is to be looked at for the purpose of determining jurisdiction.(2)

As regards the mode of valuation, the value need not on general principles be always the same as that for the purpose of levy of court-fees. Formerly questions frequently arose as to the distinction between the valuation of a suit for the purposes of stamp duty and the valuation of the subject-matter of the suit for the purpose of determining the jurisdiction of the Court.(3) Since, however, the passing of the Suits Valuation Act of 1887, these questions do not generally arise, for that Act (4) provides that where in suits other than those referred to in the Court Fees Act, 1870, s. 7, sub-ss. v., vi., ix., x., cl. (d), court-fees are payable ad valorem under the Court Fees Act, 1870, the value as determinable for the computation of court-fees and the value for purposes of jurisdiction shall be the same. This provision applies to Appellate Courts as well as to Courts of first instance.(5) The effect therefore of the Suits Valuation Act has been to assimilate the value for court fees and for jurisdiction and thus to avoid an independent inquiry to determine the jurisdiction of Courts.(6) Where, however, the value determinable for the computation of court-fees and the value for purposes of jurisdiction is not the same, and it is alleged that the suit has either by mistake (1) or intentionally (2) been overvalued, the Court enters upon a preliminary inquiry before going into the merits to determine this question, and if the suit be found to be overvalued it will return the plaint for presentation to the lowest Court of competent jurisdiction. If the claim is amended so as to increase the original value, jurisdiction may be taken away.(3) But while the subject-matter of a suit is determined by the plaintiff's allegations in the plaint, the valuation of the subject-matter, which directly determines the jurisdiction in its pecuniary aspect, does not depend absolutely on them. The plaintiff can demand anything he likes, and the demand will determine the jurisdiction, which will further depend upon a proper valuation of it. But the plaintiff's valuation of that demand will not always be conclusive for that purpose.(4) No person can value his suit at a figure higher than what his own statement of facts shows that the subject-matter of it is worth.(5) If, however, during the trial, or at the conclusion of the suit, it be ascertained that the claim has been overvalued, it is necessary to see whether the overvaluation has been bonâ fide or not. The value of property depends in large measure upon opinion, and the Court will therefore not declare want of jurisdiction if in good faith the plaintiff has alleged the value to be within the jurisdiction.

The approximate amount stated in the plaint may be taken, it being a general principle that, even where jurisdiction depends on particular facts stated, the proceedings will not be null through a mere error in stating the facts so as to found the jurisdiction; though they will be voided probably by fraud, or, at any rate, will be voidable against him who has practised it.(6)

It is the bonâ fide nature of the claim and not the amount actually recovered which determines the jurisdiction, otherwise the Court would in many cases find itself in this anomalous position; it would have had full jurisdiction over the case from its inception up to the very moment of giving judgment, and would then find that the conclusion at which it had arrived had the effect of depriving it of jurisdiction. So where a person sued bonâ fide in the High Court to recover Rs. 843.12.0 as damages, but through defective proof failed to attain a larger amount than Rs. 75, it was held that the High Court had jurisdiction under clause 12 of the Charter.(7) The chief reason why the amount which is proved and claimed in a suit does not determine or affect the jurisdiction over it is that the Court has to consider and inquire in the suit, not only as to that amount, but as to the total amount asked for in the plaint, and discussed in the proceedings; the claim for the portion dismissed being adjudicated upon not less than that for the portion decreed. Nor is the other course practicable, as the amount proved cannot be known at the commencement of the suit, and jurisdiction must be fixed before proceedings are commenced and evidence entered upon.(1) The pecuniary jurisdiction of a Civil Court on its original or appellate side is, ordinarily speaking, governed by the value stated by the plaintiff in his plaint; but if a suit having regard to the valuation in the plaint is within the jurisdiction it is not ousted by the Court finding that a decree for a sum exceeding the limits of its pecuniary jurisdiction should be given to the plaintiff.(2)

It is a well-known principle that the merits of a demand are immaterial as affecting jurisdiction. It is a mistaken conception that jurisdiction depends on facts or the actual existence of matters or things instead of upon the allegations concerning them.(3) The question of jurisdiction does not depend upon the truth or falsehood of the claim, but upon its nature; it is determinable at the commencement, not at the conclusion, of the inquiry.(4) It has, however, been held in this country that a plaintiff cannot give jurisdiction to or take away jurisdiction from a Court by adding to his claim something to which he was not entitled upon any view of the case, and such unwarrantable addition to his claim must be struck out and the jurisdiction of the Court determined with reference to the rest of his claim.(5)

But the cases referred to in the first of the last-mentioned decisions appear, it has been pointed out,(6) to proceed upon a misconception of the nature of jurisdiction as stated above, unless they may be justified on the ground that an "exaggerated claim thus brought for the purpose of getting a trial in a different Court is substantially a fraud upon the law, and must be rejected, whether it arises from mere recklessness or from an artful design to get the adjudication of one Judge instead of that of another;" (1) a principle which may apply when the intention of evading the competency of jurisdiction is certain.(2) In practice, however, the establishment of fraud, which should not be presumed, involves considerable difficulties. To every case in which the demand is evidently exaggerated there will be many which will be really doubtful and where the Judge might act according to his own peculiar views in declaring himself incompetent to take cognizance of a demand beyond the pecuniary limits of his jurisdiction, as he finds it too excessive.(3)

The general effect, however, of the Suits Valuation Act is, as already stated, to avoid an independent inquiry to determine the jurisdiction of Courts, and this question, in respect of simple overvaluation, as distinguished from other additions to the claim,(4) is not so likely to arise as formerly. And in the case of appeals the matter is now regulated by sect. 11 of the Suits Valuation Act. Since the passing of that Act it has been held that while it is no doubt a sound rule that Courts should not allow parties to evade the law relating to matters of jurisdiction and that where it is found that a party has intentionally exaggerated his claim in order to bring his suit in a Court which otherwise would not have jurisdiction to try it, before the merits of the claim have been gone into the plaint should be returned to be presented to the proper Court; yet this rule must be taken with qualifications; and one important qualification is that embodied in sect. 11 of the Suits Valuation Act, namely that where the suit has been tried on its merits by the first Court, and the overvaluation of the suit is not found to have prejudicially affected the disposal of the suit on the merits, there the objection as to jurisdiction should not be given effect to. A plaintiff who alters the valuation of his suit for the purpose of evading jurisdiction may be punished by having no costs allowed to him; but it does not conduce to promote the ends of justice if an Appellate Court were to set aside a decision which is found to be correct on the merits, simply because the value of the suit had been designedly increased or diminished to evade jurisdiction.(5) question of essential jurisdiction throughout the suit. The jurisdiction in appeals and execution is determined primarily by the amount or value of the subject-matter of the original suit. Appeals from decrees of original Courts, when allowed, lie "to the Courts authorized to hear appeals" from these Courts.(1) Appeals from orders lie to the Court to which an appeal lies from a decree.(2) In the case of appeals to the Privy Council, the value of the subject-matter must be Rs. 10,000 and upwards, and the amount or value of the matter in dispute on appeal must not be less than that amount.(3) But, in the case of all other appeals, the valuation of the dispute on appeal is not considered even in determining whether an appeal is to lie. It was formerly contended that the appeal should be held to lie to the Court having jurisdiction over the amount in dispute in the appeal, but it is now settled that the value of the original suit, and not of the matter in dispute in the appeal, is the criterion by which to determine appellate jurisdiction. It is thus the money value of the original suits that fixes the jurisdiction of the Courts throughout the subsequent litigation in its several stages, and not the value of what has been left in dispute.(4) Not only does the jurisdiction continue throughout the suit, but whatever may be the result of the suit, in all such proceedings also, such as execution, as by the Code are brought within its cognizance as incidental to the suit. Jurisdiction is not lost in execution, because the interest accrued after decree has raised the amount due above the money limit.(5) See generally as to execution, sect. 38, post.

"Civil nature."—This will exclude all criminal proceedings, but the term "civil" cannot be considered as merely the opposite of criminal, for there are suits which, though not relating to matters of a criminal, are yet not of a civil nature. Thus the explanation, which merely declares and enacts the law as it has always been administered by the Court, shows that suits as to religious rites or ceremonies, which involve no question of right to property or to an office, are not suits of a civil nature,(1) and as such cognizable by the Courts, which have also in some cases refused to interfere in matters of a purely social nature. Rights of a civil nature mean such rights as are vested in the citizen and fall within the domain of private and not of public law.(2) These rights relate both to property and to the person, and suits may be for the recovery of possession, or damages, or for specific relief. Wherever a right is recognized by law, a suit will lie to enforce it unless it is barred by any enactment on the principle ubi jus ibi remedium. What are such rights is the subject-matter of substantive law and not of procedure, and therefore need not be discussed here.(3) The question whether a suit is of a civil nature is not necessarily the same as that whether it is cognizable, as the cognizability depends not only on the nature of the suit, but on the recognition by positive law of the existence of the rights stated and of the right to the redress sought. So suits for enforcement of rights relating to caste are suits of a civil nature, though they are not always cognizable by the Courts as such. In the Bengal Presidency, suits for restoration to caste were made expressly so cognizable by Bengal Reg. III. of 1793, and have been often taken cognizance of by the Courts. Whilst, on the other hand, Bombay Reg. II. of 1827, in giving Civil Courts a cognizance "generally of all suits and complaints of a civil nature," expressly provided that "no interference on the part of the Court in caste questions is hereby warranted beyond the admission and trial of any suit instituted for the recovery of damages on account of an alleged injury to the caste and character of the plaintiff, arising from some illegal act or unjustifiable conduct of the other party."(4)

The subject is dealt with in Hukm Chand's Civ. Pr. Again, a suit for violation of a right of privacy is not generally allowed, because the suit is not recognized by the general law of India, and not because such a suit is not of a civil nature, a suit of that character being allowed in Gujarat and various districts of the N. W. P., where the right is recognized under local custom. In addition to suits relating to caste, reference may be made to certain others in regard to which questions have arisen from time to time. Suits relating to marriage have long been held cognizable by Civil Courts, having been made expressly so in the Bengal Presidency by Bengal Reg. III. of 1793—such as suits to declare the validity or invalidity or jactitation of marriage; for damages for breach of, though not for specific performance of, marriage; and restitution of conjugal rights.

As already stated, and as appears from the section, suits merely relating to religious rights and ceremonies will not be entertained unless they involve a right to property or to an office. The latter may be either of a personal character, such as that of a family priest, or may be a local office. Personal offices are gradually losing their legal character as such, and the law now appears generally to recognize only local offices—that is, offices connected with a certain temple, ghat, or locality which are essentially distinct from personal offices.(1)

"Either expressly or impliedly barred."—The words in the former Code, "barred by any enactment for the time being in force," were held to mean expressly barred, and therefore the giving of a concurrent remedy did not bar a suit.(2) As to whether the matter would now fall within the implied bar, vide post. Enactments affecting the jurisdiction of Courts will be construed so far as possible to avoid the effect of transferring the determination of rights and liabilities from the ordinary Courts to executive officers.(3) The jurisdiction of a Civil Court is not excluded unless the cognizance of the entire suit as brought is barred.(4) The most important restrictions on the jurisdiction of the ordinary Civil Courts over civil suits are enacted by the Acts relating to the revenue or the rent of the agricultural or other lands assessed with the Government demand. The provisions of these Acts are different for different provinces, but they all appear to be based on the principle that matters likely to affect the liability for, or the amount of, the Government Land Revenue, should be adjudicated upon by Revenue Officers, who have better acquaintance with such matters and with a procedure more elastic and summary than that of the ordinary Civil Courts.(1) As instances of the particular matters falling within the cognizance of Revenue Courts, and of which the Civil Courts can, therefore, not take cognizance, reference may be made to sects. 93, 95, and 241 of the North-Western Provinces Rent Act (XII. of 1901); (2) sect. 158 of the Punjab Land Revenue Act (XVII. of 1887); (3) sects. 76 and 77 of the Punjab Tenancy Act (XVI. of 1887); (4) sects. 4 and 5 of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act (X. of 1876).(5) It has, however, been recently held by the Bombay High Court that sect. 4 (c) of the last-named Act is not a bar to a suit in which there is a claim arising out of the alleged illegality of proceedings taken for the realization of land revenue.(6)

In the Madras Presidency (7) and in Lower Bengal, the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts in rent and tenancy cases has not, as a general rule, been excluded. By Act VIII. (B. C.) of 1869, Revenue Courts were abolished over the greater part of Bengal, and the trial of rent suits was made over to the ordinary Civil Courts.(8) The bar is in some cases due to administrative requirements and practical convenience. Thus the Municipal Acts of some of the provinces contain special provisions barring the cognizance of suits by Civil Courts chiefly in matters relating to taxation.(9)

Somewhat on a similar principle, sect. 133 of the Criminal Procedure Code provides that no order made by a Magistrate under that section "shall be called in question in any Civil Court;" though this provision has been held not to bar a suit for a declaration of a person's exclusive right to any land which the Magistrate may have declared or assumed to be public highway.(10) And it has been held that under this section the fact that a criminal trial has not resulted in a conviction is no bar to a civil suit against the accused.(11) In some cases the bar against civil jurisdiction is merely of a provisional character, as in the case of the Pensions Act of 1871.(1) The Civil Courts are bound to respect an order passed by a Magistrate when he is acting within his jurisdiction; (2) but a suit has been held to lie declaring that the order of a Magistrate passed under sect. 518, Act X. of 1872, was without jurisdiction, and giving relief by declaring the plaintiff's right.(3) As also one for maintenance of a child notwithstanding the order of a magistrate refusing maintenance.(4)

A judgment and decree vitiated by fraud or collusion is a nullity, and a suit will lie to set it aside.(5) There is no enactment barring the Court's jurisdiction to entertain a suit to set aside, on the ground of fraud, a decree passed by another Court of concurrent jurisdiction.(6) While the question whether a decree sought to be executed was obtained by fraud is not within the scope of sect. 47, post, and can only be raised by a separate suit, if, however, the decree is not impeached for fraud, but only the execution proceedings thereunder, the question must be raised in those proceedings, and not by separate suit.(7) A grant of probate is not in the nature of a summary proceeding to be contested by a regular suit in the Civil Court. The grant must be contested by an application to revoke in the Court of Probate.(8) The grant of probate is the decree of a Court which no other Court can set aside except for fraud or want of jurisdiction.(9)

The former section dealt only with bar by special enactment, but there are other cases in which a suit is not allowed to lie, on general principles of law. The amended section includes an implied bar. In some cases a suit is not allowed as there is no substantive right giving rise to a cause of action by reason of the non-recognition of the right, on account of some rule of statutory or common law or of some principle of public policy or morality. So a special procedure having been provided in the Criminal Procedure Code in regard to public roads, a suit will not lie for obstructing a public road unless the plaintiff has suffered special damage. As regards, however, nuisances, see now sect. 91, post. Certain suits are barred in the interest of public morality. These cases proceed on the ground that a Court ought not to enforce contracts injurious to and against the public good, and not on the ground that the suit is not of a civil nature or there is a defect in the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts over it.(10) Again, a suit does not lie to recover a voluntary payment because there is no right to recover.(11) Where a statute enacts a right or an obligation, and provides a method of enforcing it, that method and not the remedy at Common Law must be followed. Where, however, a statute is confirmatory of a pre-existing right, the new remedy is presumed as cumulative or alternative unless an intention to the contrary appears from some other part of the statute.(1) The Madras High Court has recognized that principle in disallowing suits brought to enforce registration otherwise than in accordance with the provisions of sect. 77 of the Indian Registration Act. The Calcutta, Madras, and Allahabad High Courts hold that a suit will not lie to compel the registration of a document after a refusal by the sub-registrar to register the same except in accordance with these provisions.(2) Again, when by an Act of the Legislature powers are given to any person, for a public purpose, from which an individual may receive an injury, if the mode of redressing the injury is pointed out by the Act, the jurisdiction of the ordinary Courts is ousted, and in case of injury the party cannot proceed by ordinary action.(3) So, the Code providing a special method of paying the necessary expenses of a witness, the latter cannot sue for them.(4) Every Court is competent to award costs in any proceedings, and a separate suit will therefore not lie for their recovery.(5)

No bar to a suit will be implied, however, from the provision of a summary and special remedy in a special Act for a right existing under common law. Thus a suit for compensation for wrongful seizure of cattle will lie in a Civil Court, the provisions of Act I. of 1871 being no bar to it.(6) A suit may be brought for confirmation of an execution sale which has been set aside by the Court,(7) or, if the execution should have been transferred to the Collector, by the Collector,(8) ordering the sale. So also under the last Code it was held that, notwithstanding sects. 318, 319, 328, and 331 of that Code, under which action might be taken by a purchaser at an execution-sale to recover possession of the property purchased, a regular suit might also be brought by him for the recovery of the same,(1) the two remedies being concurrent. And notwithstanding the procedure under sect. 152, O. XX. r. 6; sect. 114, O. XLVII. r. 1, post, may be available, there is nothing to prevent a suit to rectify a mistake in a decree.(2)

Generally, where a decree-holder can proceed under the execution sections, he cannot bring a regular suit. So where, having obtained a decree for money, A. sued to recover the unsatisfied balance thereof from B., alleging that the property of the deceased judgment-debtor was in his possession, it was held that he should have enforced his decree by execution and sale, or by execution and attachment and appointment of a receiver, and no regular suit would lie.(3) A suit does not lie for damages for non-compliance with a mandatory injunction to compel the performance of which the plaintiff had his remedy in execution.(4) Nor will a suit lie for the costs of a receiver which were deducted in execution of a decree for mesne profits from the amount of such mesne profits, inasmuch as the objection to such deduction should have been urged in the execution proceedings.(5) So, in the case of an ordinary action in ejectment in which a plaintiff gets a decree for possession of the property, if he takes no steps to execute that decree within the time allowed by law, he cannot by a fresh suit, based either on the decree or on his title as it stood at the time that the first suit was brought, evade the law of limitation.(6) A person suing on his proprietary title to recover possession of mortgaged property on the ground that the mortgage had been satisfied, and obtaining an unconditional decree for possession, is in the same position.(7) The principle is that once any right has been enforced by a suit in which a decree has been obtained, the decree becomes the embodiment of that right, and that right in its inchoate state is merged in the decree,(8) the enforcement of which, if not barred by limitation, must be by proceedings taken to execute it. As regards suits for redemption, considerable conflict exists. In some cases the existence of a prior decree for redemption unexecuted has been held to bar a subsequent decree for the same relief. The question has been variously viewed from the standpoint of the general principles referred to, and the applicability of sect. 11 (formerly sect. 13) and sect. 47 (formerly sect. 244) of the Code. It appears to be agreed that in some cases sect. 13 would have barred the subsequent suit. A Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court has held that the nature of redemption decrees makes sect. 244 (now 47) inapplicable, and that the operation of the rule of res judicata depends upon the nature of the decree made in the previous suits in each instance. Where a Court has once adjudicated upon a mortgagor's right to redeem, so many of the issues as bore upon that, and are heard and determined, become res judicata and cannot be re-opened; but unless there has been a determination that the mortgagor has no right to redeem, there would still remain one other issue in a subsequent suit, which would not be res judicata. Until a mortgagee has applied for an order of sale under sect. 93 of the Transfer of Property Act (see now O. XXXIV. r. 8), the plaintiff's right to redeem exists, and can be at any time enforced. If, therefore, a mortgagor has obtained a decree for redemption, which does not contain a provision foreclosing the right of redemption on default, and has not enforced that decree and has not paid in the decretal amount within time, he can subsequently bring a second suit for redemption of the mortgage in respect of which such first decree was obtained.(1) On the other hand, a Full Bench of the Madras High Court has held that where a suit for redemption has been instituted and a decree for redemption has been passed therein, but not executed, a subsequent suit is not maintainable for the redemption of the same mortgage. The equity of redemption no doubt remains unforeclosed, and the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee continues until an order absolute under sect. 93 (see now O. XXXIV. r. 8) is made; and having regard to the continuance of the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee, earlier decisions of the same High Court held that as such jural relation had not been put an end to, a second suit would lie. The Full Bench, however, held that though the right might exist, the remedy was barred by sect. 11 (formerly sect. 13) of the Code. A decree for redemption passed under sect. 92 of the Transfer of Property Act (see now O. XXXIV. r. 7) is a final judgment within the meaning of sect. 11, post; but if the order absolute for foreclosure or sale under sect. 93 is the final judgment, and the decree under sect. 92 (see now O. XXXIV. r. 7) is interlocutory, then, if no order is passed under sect. 93, the suit is pending, and sect. 10 (formerly sect. 12), post, bars a second trial. The fact, therefore, that no order absolute has been made under sect. 93 (see now O. XXXIV. r. 8), extinguishing the right to redeem, will not allow of a second suit being brought, though it will entitle the mortgagor to exercise his right of redemption under the decree if he be not barred by limitation by obtaining a postponement of the day fixed for payment.(2) The Bombay High Court has held that a decree for redemption, on the default of the decree-holder to pay the money declared to be due within the time fixed by the decree, or, if none be fixed, within the time allowed by law for the execution of the decree, operates as a judgment of foreclosure and debars the mortgagor from afterwards bringing a second suit to redeem the same property.(3) As regards the Calcutta High Court, the only two reported decisions appear to be in conflict.(1) In the under-mentioned case,(2) a second suit was allowed on the ground that the first suit did not in default foreclose the right to redeem, and that the cause of action in the two suits was not the same, thus excluding the doctrine of res judicata. In, however, a subsequent case (3) it was contended that until an order absolute for sale was made the right to redeem existed, and that the suit should be regarded as a suit to redeem. In overruling this contention, the Court observed as follows: "Even if there is no order absolute, the decree nisi directing the sale is in existence, and if the right to redeem be still alive, it cannot be enforced by a separate suit."

When a decree declaring a right to partition has not been given effect to by the parties proceeding to partition in accordance with it, it is competent to the parties, or any of them, if they still continue to be interested in the joint property, to bring another suit for a declaration of a right to a partition in case their right to partition is called in question at a time when, by reason of limitation or otherwise, they cannot put into effect the decree first obtained. In this respect, suits for declaration of right to partition differ from most other suits.(4) In this case there was no decree actually making partition, while in the under-mentioned case,(5) in which there was a decree directing partition, it was held that such decree operated as res judicata, and the subsequent suit was barred.

A second suit will lie if the first suit is for money against A., and the second to realize the decree from the property of a stranger thereto.(6)

Upon the judgment arises a legal obligation to discharge it, on which an action is maintainable.(1) It is by such an action that the judgments of foreign and colonial Courts are supported and enforced, and suits on foreign judgments are not infrequent in this country. A suit will lie on a judgment of a Court in a Native State.(2) Where an action on a judgment or decree will not give to the plaintiff a higher or better remedy than he already has, there is no advantage in allowing it to be brought; and it would be contrary to the spirit of the Code to do so. Where it will give a higher or better remedy the case is different, and there are cases in which an action may be the only mode of enforcing a judgment or decree.(3) In the case of a domestic judgment, ample provisions exist for the execution of the decree not only within the jurisdiction of the Court by which it was passed, but within any part of the British territories in India. And on the principles already adverted to, where provisions have been made in regard to execution, and the decree-holder can proceed under them, he cannot bring a regular suit. In such cases the qualification to the general rule comes into operation, the right to sue being taken away by implication.

A suit will not lie in a Small Cause Court on a decree of a Subordinate Judge's Court,(4) or on a decree of its own,(5) as the law makes full provision as to the mode of obtaining satisfaction of such decrees. Nor will a suit lie on a rent decree of the Revenue Court,(6) nor in the High Court on a decree of the Small Cause Court,(7) otherwise in Bombay, in order that the judgment-creditor may have execution against the immovable estate of the debtor.(8)

In the under-mentioned undefended case (9) under the preceding Code, Wilson, J., held that a suit on a decree of the High Court would lie in that Court, as the decree had remained unsatisfied, and it was too late to revive it in the usual way. But this decision has been dissented from by the Bombay High Court.(10) A suit has also been held to lie on a declaratory decree of which no execution can be taken.(11) But a person who has obtained a decree establishing his right and entitling him to consequential relief cannot again sue for the same, but can only work out his right and obtain the relief by executing the decree. And sect. 47, post, expressly prohibits a separate suit for the purpose.(1) No suit will lie where the decree orders a certain amount to be paid for maintenance at certain intervals, as execution may be taken of such a decree for amounts accruing due under it subsequent to its date.(2) A suit has also been held to lie in the Civil Court on a decree obtained in the Court of the Agent for Sirdars against the defendant's father, the decree, which was for payment of a sum of money by instalments, having become incapable of execution on the death of the defendant's father, the defendant himself not being a sirdar.(3)

A suit has been held to lie for the amount of an unsatisfied claim adjudged by a decree which was destroyed during the Mutiny pending an appeal taken by the defendant, the cause of action to date from the lost decree.(4) This was distinguished in a subsequent case in which the records were not destroyed before a decision on appeal, it being held that where the records of a case are destroyed, the plaintiff may prove his decree and get the execution of it, but, on his inability to do so, he cannot bring a second suit for the same subject-matter.(5) A suit, however, should not be allowed, whether the record is destroyed before or after the decision of the appeal.(6) A suit does not lie on a decree of which execution is barred by limitation.(7) And where a plaintiff has obtained a decree, and has by his own neglect lost his right to execute it, he will not be permitted to revert to the position which he held before the institution of the suit, and to bring a fresh suit.(8)

A decree or judgment must be considered valid until reversed or superseded. Therefore, a suit does not lie to recover back money recovered in execution of a decree while that decree subsists; (1) and if more is recovered under a decree than is really due, the excess can be recovered back by the judgment-debtor only in execution proceedings and not by a separate suit.(2) When, however, the decree is reversed or superseded, the amount recovered under it may be recovered back not only by a summary process, but also by a suit.(3) And sect. 47 of the Code being applicable only to a subsisting decree, is not a bar to such a suit,(4) the operation of that section coming to an end as soon as the decree is discharged by payment.(5) The interest of the money (6) and the mesne profits of the land (7) realized in execution and recovered back can be recovered for the period for which the person entitled was kept out of the money or land.

10. No Court shall proceed with the trial of any suit in which the matter in issue is also directly and substantially in issue in a previously instituted suit between the same parties, or between parties under whom they or any of them claim litigating under the same title where such suit is pending in the same or any other Court in British India having jurisdiction to grant the relief claimed, or in any Court beyond the limits of British India established or continued by the Governor General in Council and having like jurisdiction, or before His Majesty in Council.

Explanation.—The pendency of a suit in a foreign Court does not preclude the Courts in British India from trying a suit founded on the same cause of action.

"Lis pendens."—"The object of the rule contained in sect. 12 (the present section) of the Code is to prevent Courts of concurrent jurisdiction from simultaneously entertaining and adjudicating upon two parallel litigations in respect of the same cause of action, the same subject-matter, and the same relief. The policy of the law is to confine the plaintiff to one litigation, thus obviating the possibility of contradictory verdicts by two or more Courts in respect of 'the same relief.'" (8)

The same learned Judge added: "It is scarcely necessary to say that the rule contained in sect. 12 of the Code of Civil Procedure forms no part of the rule of res judicata, though the reason upon which it is based is in some respects similar in principle to the doctrine of res judicata. The distinction between the two rules, however, is vast. The rule in sect. 12 (the present section) relates to matters sub judice, whilst the rule in sect. 13 (now sect. 11) relates to matters which have passed into rem judicatam. The one bars only a 'suit'; the other bars both the trial of a 'suit' and of an 'issue' subject to their respective conditions. Those conditions are not all the same in sect. 12 (the present section) as they are in sect. 13 (now sect. 11), and the wording of the two sections as to the distinction is so clear that it is not easy to confound the two rules. Now, in sect. 12 (the present section), before the plea can operate as a bar, the second suit must not only raise the same issue as that in the former suit still pending, but it must be for 'the same relief.'"(1) As to this last now, vide post, "Relief." It may be added that if a plaintiff were not confined to one litigation, but were allowed to conduct a number of parallel litigations at the same time, they would result in as many judgments, which, if to the same effect, would be useless and a cause of unnecessary expense. If, on the other hand, they were to a different effect, all would not admit of execution, and it would not be possible to decide which should be executed. Moreover, contradictory judgments would tend to discredit the administration of justice. The rule, therefore, should be such as to receive application only when the various incidents of the suits are so far identical that they may, and if rightly decided should, lead to the same judgment.(2) Though the conditions of the two rules relating to lis pendens and res judicata are different, the expressions used in enumerating them are generally used in the same sense, and reference therefore may be made to the cases cited in the next section. The rule of lis pendens not only affects a suit brought while another suit is pending, but also alienations of rights or interests in any property made during the pendency of a suit concerning that property.(3)

Stay.—The words "Except where a suit has been stayed under sect. 20" have been omitted. Sect. 20 of the last Code dealt with the power of the Court to stay proceedings; but, apart from this, the Court had a general jurisdiction to stay proceedings on the ground of inconvenience attending the trial of different suits in different Courts at the same time. So the High Court has stayed a suit instituted before it until after the decree in a suit previously instituted at Calicut, observing that the two suits to a very great extent covered the same ground, and that it was impossible that they should proceed together, as many inconveniences might arise—amongst others, difficulties in connection with the filing of documents and taking of accounts, and the possibility of a conflict of decisions; adding that it was necessary to follow the general rule that the plaintiff who first brings his suit, claiming an account in respect of any particular transactions, has a right to have that account taken in the Court in which he has chosen to bring his suit.(1) Sect. 20 has now been omitted.

"Proceed with the trial."—This section in the last Code only provided that no suit shall be tried if the same issues were involved in a previously instituted suit in a competent Court. The present Code substitutes the words at the head of the paragraph to explain more clearly the action to be taken by the Court, which is in the nature of a stay of proceedings. The section, however, is merely intended to secure general convenience. It does not bar the institution of a suit, and therefore cannot be construed as dispensing with the institution of a suit within the proper time when the law expressly requires such institution.(2)

"Suit."—In the under-mentioned case,(3) the Court, without expressing a decided opinion on the point, thought that a proceeding in execution being not a suit, but only a proceeding in a suit, it would be more correct to hold that a proceeding under sect. 47 is not a suit within the meaning of this section.

"Matter in issue."—The matter in issue in the subsequent suit must also be directly and substantially in issue in the previously instituted suit. The subject-matter in respect of which the relief is claimed must be the same in the two suits, the principle of lis pendens having no application if the subject-matter of the subsequent suit is not in any sense the subject-matter of the previous suit.(4) Where the question of title was the same, but the issues were different, relating to another plot of land and to another period of time, the section was held to have no application.(5)

"Previously instituted (pending) suit."—Priority in time is the proper guide in determining which suit should be allowed to proceed; (6) and, in accordance with the general principle that the Court which first acquires jurisdiction should retain it, this rule is formulated. The section says "instituted"; that is, mere institution of a suit will give priority without any proceedings having been taken thereunder. A suit ceases to be lis pendens when it has been withdrawn, and the rule has been held not to apply when the former suit has been withdrawn since the institution of the second suit.(7) A suit, of course, comes to an end when a decree is passed in it. It is not, however, material whether the suit is pending as an original suit or an appeal. A pending appeal will bar the trial of a subsequent suit.(1) The mere applying however for, or obtaining, leave to appeal to the Privy Council cannot of itself amount to the pending of an appeal till such appeal is actually filed, for it may happen that the parties who obtain such leave may never appeal at all against such decree or order.(2) It has been held that the appeal is not "to be deemed to relate to the entry of the judgment appealed from so as to defeat the plaintiff's action properly brought intermediate the judgment and appeal."(3) In a recent case where there had been a decree for maintenance, followed two years later by a decree for the sale of the property charged by it, but three more years elapsed before the application for execution, it was held that owing to this delay the doctrine of lis pendens did not apply, for the sale had not been during the active prosecution of a contentious suit or proceeding.(4)

"Relief."—The last Code enacted that not merely must the matter in issue be the same, but the previous suit must claim the same relief. The cause of action is essentially different from the relief claimed. While the identity, or even similarity, of the relief claimed is not material for the rule of res judicata, the identity of the relief was held essential to the application of the rule of lis pendens. So the section was held not to apply where, though the issue may be the same as that in the other suit, the relief was not the same.(5) And it has been held not to apply to suits between principals and agents for accounts.(6) Where the plaintiff in the first instance sued the defendant for cancellation of a putni lease and for mesne profits, and then brought a second suit against the defendant to recover arrears of rent for the same period, it was held that sect. 12 of the last Code did not apply, as it could not be said that the former suit was for the same relief as that claimed in the second suit.(7) So, again, suits for the same dues in respect of different years are not for the same relief. If a suit for a demand for one year should bar the trial of a suit for the same demand for a subsequent year, the prolongation of the earlier litigation might result in barring the later suit by lapse of the limitation period (8) If the subsequent suit is, however, for a part of the relief claimed in the first suit, its trial was held to be barred by that of the first suit.(1) It will, however, be observed that this section omits the words formerly appearing "for the same relief." This was stated to have been done because the Select Committee were of opinion that the application of the provision should depend not upon the mere prayer of the parties, but upon the matter in issue. Probably in a large number of cases where the matter in issue is the same, the relief deriving as a consequence therefrom will be, or should be, the same. But however this may be, the section apparently substitutes as a test the identity of the matter in issue irrespective of the relief sought upon the proof of the facts alleged in such issue.

"Same parties."—Not only must the persons be the same, but they must be suing or sued in the same capacity. Where the same person sues in different capacities it is the same as if there were different persons.(2) The section has been amended to show that the litigation must be under the same title.

"Jurisdiction."—The Court must have had jurisdiction to grant relief in the previous suit. So in the under-mentioned case (3) the Court observed: "It is clear that in this case the proceedings pending before the Revenue Officer were not for the same relief (that is, for ejectment of the defendants and for mesne profits) as was sought in the present suit, nor had the Revenue Officer jurisdiction to grant such relief."

Foreign Court.—Referring to this explanation, the Court observed: (4) "That it seems to follow, as a necessary consequence, that the existence of a decree in a foreign Court is no bar to the execution of a decree of a Court in British India, even though the cause of action in both suits be the same."

Res judicata generally considered.—These sections embody the doctrine of res judicata, which, though it has sometimes been treated in English law as a branch of the doctrine of estoppel, is yet essentially distinct from it. Estoppel, which is dealt with by sect. 115 of the Evidence Act, proceeds upon the equitable principle of altered situation, whilst the doctrine of res judicata proceeds on the principle that there should be a determination to litigation, and that a defendant should not in respect of the same matter be harassed by several suits. Estoppel is a part of the law of evidence, whilst res judicata belongs to the province of procedure strictly so-called.(1) Perhaps the shortest way to describe the difference between the two is to say that whilst the plea of res judicata prohibits the Court from entering into an inquiry at all as to a matter already adjudicated upon, an estoppel prohibits a party, after the inquiry has already been entered upon, from proving anything which would contradict his own previous declarations or acts to the prejudice of another party, who, relying upon those declarations or acts, altered his position. In other words, res judicata prohibits an inquiry in limine, whilst an estoppel is only a piece of evidence.(2)

The English doctrine of res judicata was adopted in this country before the promulgation of the first Code of 1859. As the Judicial Committee observed,(3) upon the statement of the rule in the Duchess of Kingston's case, there is nothing technical or peculiar to the law of England in the rule as so stated. It was recognized by the civil law, and was consistent with sect. 2 of the Code of 1859. Though, however, consistent with it, sect. 2 of that Code was not identical with and fell considerably short of it.(4) It only provided for bar by judgment, and did not deal with the remaining portion of the rule relating to the bar of the trial of an issue by judgment on that issue, which has sometimes been called bar by verdict. The gist of this latter rule is that an actual decision on any matter directly in issue in a suit is conclusive of that issue in every subsequent suit brought on any cause and for any purpose or object. Notwithstanding this defect in the rule, the Courts, acting

(1) Res judicata precludes a man from avowing the same thing in successive litigations, while estoppel prevents his saying one thing at one time and the opposite at another: Cassamally v. Currimbhoy, 36 B. 214 (1911); Bhaishanker v. Morarji, 36 B. 283 (1911); Baleshwar Bagarti v. Bhagirathi Das, 35 C. 701 (1908); Bhagirathi Das v. Baleshwar Bagarti, 41 C. 69 (1913). on general principles, recognized the conclusiveness of judgments as to issues, also, the principle of res judicata, whether specially enacted or not, being an essential part of the law of procedure in all countries.(1) Other difficulties also arose with reference to the meaning to be attached to the words "cause of action," in sect. 2 of the Code of 1859. This section was therefore very considerably modified in the Code of 1877, res judicata being made applicable to issues, and the identity of the cause of action being replaced by that of matter in issue. The effect of this was to provide for an estoppel against defendants, the words "suit or issue" being effective to estop a defendant from defence as well as a plaintiff from attack.(2) Another material alteration made was the express extension of the doctrine of res judicata, with certain limitations to foreign judgments, the limitations being enacted by sect. 14.(3)

In the rule of res judicata, as enacted in 1877, only two alterations were, prior to the present Code, made, which were to a great extent of a verbal character. One of such alterations was to make that clear which had been previously decided, namely, that the competency of jurisdiction in regard to the Court trying the former suit was as to the subsequent suit also. The section even in its final form under the last Code was not complete or exhaustive of the effect of res judicata;(4) which, as a principle, exists independently of the Statute enacting it.(5) It did not, for instance, deal with judgments in rem, nor with that of parties represented by, though not claiming under, the parties to the former suit.(6) In fact, as observed by Sir Whitley Stokes, the question of res judicata is a subject of which the importance in a country inhabited by a litigious population is only equalled by the difficulty of dealing with it clearly, concisely, and accurately in a legislative enactment.(7) The same remarks apply to the present Code.(8) In the Bill as first drafted an attempt was made to elaborately and exhaustively formulate the rule. This arrangement was simplified by the Select Committee which considered that draft. The framers of the present draft considered that even this modified attempt to make a complete statement of the rule of res judicata was likely to lead to increased litigation, and that it was not possible to adequately expound a subject so complex within the limits of a section of an Act. It was thought better therefore to re-enact the section as it stood in the last Code, with such few modifications only as experience had shown to be necessary. The amendments consist of the added first Explanation, and Explanation II., the elimination of Explanation IV. of the last Code, and the insertion of the words "public right or of a" in the present Explanation VI. to give due effect to suits relating to public nuisances (sect. 91). The former Explanation VI. has been removed and made into a separate section (14). The subject of foreign judgments is dealt with post. Sect. 12 is new, and is necessitated by the transfer of certain of the provisions of the existing Code to Rules. The original draft contained the provisions that nothing in this section should be deemed to limit or otherwise affect any remedy which is open to any person against any judgment, order or decree in a suit or other proceeding to which such person was a party whilst suing or being sued as a minor represented by a next friend or guardian for the suit. This, however, was omitted, as the Select Committee considered that such a saving was necessarily implied, and that therefore no special provision was required for the case-law (1) which it was thus sought to settle. Similarly, words excepting judgments, orders, and decrees obtained by fraud or collusion were omitted, because sect. 44 of the Evidence Act, which it was intended to save, is confined to judgments proved by the adverse party, and the Committee considered that a provision relating to procedure was, of necessity, subject to the general law of evidence. Further, the words, "and not collaterally, incidentally, or inferentially" qualifying the adjudication were expunged, as they added nothing to the words "directly and substantially." The draft Bill contained the following explanation: "Where several issues are put in issue and tried and decided in any suit and the decision of each of such issues is material to the disposal of the suit, each such issue shall be deemed to have been directly and substantially in issue in each suit." This Explanation, it was suggested, should be added to make it clear that where in a former case several points have been involved, the finding on each of which is independently sufficient to dispose of the case, each of such findings is res judicata. It adopted the decision of the Calcutta High Court in Peary Mohun Mukerjee v. Ambica Churn Bandopadhya.(2) It has, however, been omitted.

In Bholabhai v. Adesang, 9 B. 81 (1884), West, J., said that s. 13 could not be applied quite literally; as, if it could, the Court trying a second suit would be bound by the decision of a point in a first suit treated by the Court in appeal as irrelevant for that case though not formally set aside. Nor does the section expressly provide that a Court which has no jurisdiction finally to decide a question should follow a decision of a Court which had exclusive jurisdiction to decide it. But the rules laid down in the Duchess of Kingston's case, and declared by the Privy Council to be applicable, meet such a case.

The bar is absolute against all parties, the test of res judicata being mutuality.(3) Where it exists, the original cause of action is gone, and can only be restored by getting rid of the res judicata.(4) Therefore in such case a decree-holder must obtain satisfaction of his decree by execution, and not by another suit, which cannot be brought either on the original cause of action, or, save in special cases, on the decree in which that cause has become merged. The object of the Legislature has been to prevent continued litigation on the same grounds; and this would obviously be defeated by allowing a decree-holder to abstain from putting his decree in force, and proceed again on the same cause as before.(1) A plea of res judicata must be based on the grounds of the decision actually stated in the judgment.(2) If a judgment be improperly obtained, so that it never ought to have been signed, when set aside it ought to be treated as never having existed. So judgment obtained against a dead man cannot operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit.(3)

"Court."—The term, in so far as it is used in connection with the subsequent suit, means a Court governed by the Code. From the provisions of sect. 14 it is shown that the operation of the section is not confined to decrees passed by British Indian Courts.(4) The word "Court," therefore, as used in connection with the previous suit, includes a foreign Court, and the Court of competent jurisdiction, which is referred to in the first paragraph, includes a foreign competent Court,(5) the recognition of a foreign judgment as res judicata being a portion of the positive law of British India.(6) Upon an issue whether the defendant in possession of a taluqa had lost title by inheritance thereto by reason of having been validly adopted out of his own family: held that an award to that effect of a committee of taluqdars was not a decision by a "Court" within the meaning of this section.(7)

"Try."—This word, which means the formal method of examining and adjudicating on a matter in dispute, shows that the rule in question has nothing to do with the admissibility of a judgment in evidence, and which judgment may be admissible under sects. 40–44 of the Evidence Act, even where it does not fulfil the requirements of this section.(8) There is a conflict as to whether the doctrine of res judicata applies only to a trial by a Court of original jurisdiction, or also to a disposal by an appellate Court. The Calcutta High Court has, in the under-mentioned case,(9) held in effect that a trial by an original Court only is contemplated and that the section has no application to the disposal of an appeal, and that when there is no res judicata at the time of the trial of the original suit the appellate Court is bound to decide the appeal on the merits. The contrary view, however, is taken by the Allahabad (10) and Madras (11) High Courts, which have held that the rule contained in this section is not limited to the Courts of first instance but applies equally to the procedure of the first and second appellate Courts by reason of sects. 107 (formerly sect. 582) and 108 (formerly sect. 587) respectively, and, indeed, even to miscellaneous proceedings by reason of sect. 139 (formerly sect. 647); and that the doctrin , so far as it relates to prohibiting the retrial of an issue, must refer, not to the date of the commencement of the litigation, but to the time when the Judge is called upon to decide the issue. The Panjab Chief Court appear to have taken the same view.(1) Similarly when there were cross appeals in a suit a decision in one appeal was held to be res judicata in the other, though as the suit was the same, this section could not apply.(2) The correct view is that the date, not of institution but of decision, determines the application of the principle of res judicata. See Explanation I.

Suit.—It would hardly be necessary to say, unless the contrary had been maintained, that criminal proceedings are not a suit,(3) and therefore no finding of a Criminal Court can be res judicata in a civil suit, both the parties to and character of the two proceedings being entirely different. Similarly it has often been held that the proceedings in the Criminal Court are not in general evidence in the Civil Court, and that a Civil Court is not bound to adopt the view taken by the Criminal Court as to the oral or documentary evidence.(4) The term "suit" has not been defined.(5) At the same time it has been said that sect. 647 (now sect. 141) shows that the law does not necessarily consider every proceeding in which there are parties, evidence, argument, and decision, to be a suit, there being proceedings other than suits and appeals.(6) Proceedings therefore under the insolvency sections of the Panjab Laws Act have been held not to be a suit.(7) Nor are proceedings under the Land Acquisition Act, the object and nature of which differ considerably from an ordinarily civil suit, a suit.(8) Nor is an application to amend clerical or arithmetical or accidental

The decision in Ram Chunder Singh v. Madho Kumari, 12 C. 484 (1885), is not against this view, as in that case the former suit was not a proceeding on a reference under any section of the Act, but a suit instituted by the plaintiff independently of the Act. errors in a decree, a suit,(1) nor is an application for review.(2) Miscellaneous civil proceedings will be a suit when they are treated as a suit by the Legislature.(3) In a proceeding upon an application for probate, the only question to be determined is whether the will is true or not. It is not the province of the Court to determine any question of title with reference to the property covered by the will.(4) In the last-mentioned case the Court further observed: "And it is noteworthy that a proceeding under the Probate and Administration Act is not a suit properly so called, but takes the form of a suit according to the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code (see sect. 83). That being so, we do not see how the judgment of the Allahabad High Court could be regarded as concluding the plaintiff as to the title to the estate either under sect. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code or under the general principles of res judicata." But in a recent Full Bench decision of the Bombay High Court where in a contentious proceeding for Probate a will had been held not proved and Probate refused, and the widow then brought a suit for recovery of the property of the deceased from the defendants, who held it as executors under that will, it was held that since contentious proceedings for Probate must take the form (as nearly as possible) of a suit, they constitute a suit within the meaning of this section, and therefore the Probate judgment operated as res judicata.(5) In considering upon the question of competency whether the word "suit" should be construed as including an appeal, it is held that the powers of the Court in which the suit was instituted must be looked at, and not those of the Court by which the suit was decided on appeal.(6) The draft Bill made the section applicable to a suit "or other proceeding;" but this suggestion has not been adopted. As to this, the Special Committee in their report say, "The Committee recognized that a proceeding does not come within the language of that section, but they think it better not to deal with this point in express terms, for the reason that the applicability of the doctrine of res judicata to certain proceedings is not open to doubt; and they foresee that any express reference to proceedings in a crystallised definition might only lead to difficulties (L. R. 11 I. A. 37; I. L. R. 29 C. 707)."

cause of action was a separate suit. So if a suit for the recovery of one bond has been dismissed, on the ground that the bond was not repaid, the decision would be res judicata so far as the claim for that bond is concerned in a subsequent suit brought for the recovery of that and other bonds on the ground of the same repayment.(1)

As regards appeals, vide ante, p. 35, note to sect. 2, sub voc., "Decree."

It was sometimes held, before 1892, and was enacted in that year by an addition to sect. 647 (now sect. 141), that execution proceedings are not miscellaneous proceedings but proceedings in suits. But though the word "suit" includes all proceedings in execution of the decree passed in the suit, the section does not apply where the proceedings, both earlier and subsequent, are in the same suit. For the section requires that the matter should have been in issue in another separate suit, and each separate application for execution of a decree in a suit is not a separate suit.(2) But though in such a case this section will not apply, a prior decision in the same suit may have binding force, depending not upon this section but upon general principles of law, otherwise there would be no end to litigation. So in the last-mentioned case, which was reversed on appeal to the Privy Council, the latter held that though the matter decided was not decided in a former suit but in a proceeding, of which the application in which the orders reversed by the High Court were made was merely a continuation, yet it was as binding upon the parties and those claiming under them as an interlocutory judgment in a suit is binding upon the parties in every proceeding in that suit, or as a final judgment in a suit is binding upon them in carrying the judgment into execution. It could not, in short, be held that because the prior order was made in the same suit, what it decided remained open to contest afterwards between the parties, although if it had been made in another suit it would have been final under the former sect. 13.(3) As a fact, the bar in such cases is due to the principle which has been designated the "judgment of the case," (4) the principle which is distinct from res judicata but which in the absence of any specific name has sometimes been spoken of as res judicata as falling within the literal signification of that expression, under which a decision in a prior stage of the same civil suit or proceeding operates as a bar to a fresh decision on the same point in the subsequent stages of the same suit or proceeding.(5) Thus it has been held that though an application

As, however, is pointed out, post, the principle is really a different one from res judicata, though sometimes spoken of by that name. See Gulab Koer v. Badshah Bahadur, 13 C. W. Where there is a trial of a suit, and a point has been decided in an execution proceeding in a former suit, or vice versâ, then the rule of res judicata may apply.(2) It is, however, to be noted, that it has been said (3) that it is only certain descriptions of orders passed in the course of the execution of a decree that have operation by way of res judicata, and not every order passed in execution. C. in Rupkuari v. Ramkirpal, 3 A. 141 (1880), had put too narrow a construction on the word "suit" in excluding execution proceedings. In Dinkar Ballal v. Hari Shirdhar, 14 B. 206, 209 (1889), Scott, J., said: "Moreover the previous proceeding was not an independent suit, but a proceeding in execution; and although a decision in such a proceeding is binding in subsequent proceedings in the same suit, it is a matter of doubt whether they affect claims in independent suits." The learned Judge, however, stated that it was under the circumstances not necessary to examine that question. Jardine, J., appears to have held that an order in execution proceedings in one suit could not be res judicata in another suit, though the decision in the case turned upon another point. There can, however, it is submitted, be no room for contention after the amendment of s. 647 in 1892, with respect to execution proceedings, and that there will be res judicata provided the conditions of that rule have been fulfilled, which may often be not the case having regard to the nature of the order passed in execution proceedings in the former suit. See cases in following notes.

So also the decisions in Gourmani v. Jagut Chandra, 17 C. 57 (1889); Ram Lal v. Narain, 12 A. 539 (1890); Sheik Budan v. Ram Chandra, 11 B. 537 (1887), turned on the point decided not having been adjudicated upon in the former execution proceedings, the objection in the Calcutta case having been raised by the judgment-debtor not in his character as such under the decree but in a different character. See Ashfag v. Gauri, P. C., 33 A. 264, 271 (1911). And see post.

as the matter in issue in the two cases will be different. So a decree directing periodical payments has for its purpose been deemed to be a separate decree in regard to each of such payments.(1) And a decree confirmed in appeal has also been deemed to be different from what it was before the confirmation: and a dismissal of an application for the execution of the original decree has been held to be no bar to an application for execution of the appellate decree.(2)

"Issue."—The principle of res judicata applies both to the trial of suits and the trial of issues. A suit ends in a dismissal, or a decree in whole or in part. An issue ends in a finding, and the rule contained in the section enacts that not only is a suit which has once been tried and determined not again maintainable, but an issue which has once been directly and substantially raised and decided cannot be litigated a second time: the principle upon which the rule is based applying equally to issues as to suits.(3)

The first clause of the section is not well constructed. It would be clearer if it ran, "No Court shall try any issue which, or any suit in which, the matter directly and substantially in issue has been," etc.(4) The trial of a subsequent suit will be barred only if the matter is directly and substantially in issue in it (vide ante, first paragraph). An issue is said to arise "when a proposition of law or fact, which a plaintiff must allege in order to show a right to sue, is affirmed by the one party and denied by the other." And see Explanations III. and IV.(5)

There is nothing in the Code to restrict the application of the rule of res judicata to issues of fact as distinct from issues of law. In the original draft Bill it was proposed to affirm the view that a pure finding of law might operate as res judicata, but to limit the operation of the principle to adjudications on the merits, with a view to excluding, for instance, dismissals on a preliminary question of jurisdiction. Apparently it was considered that this was a matter which should be left to the Courts to determine. It has been said that a point of law can never be res judicata.(6) But it is submitted that the rule thus broadly stated is not sound. It is difficult, however, to reconcile the decisions on the point.

The principle of res judicata does not depend for its application upon the question whether the decision which is to be used as a bar was a right decision or a wrong decision in law or in facts, and it is immaterial whether the decree set up as a bar was rightly or wrongly passed in law or in fact.(7) It is obvious that if this were not so there would be no finality, for in all cases the previous decision might be challenged for error. The force of res judicata attaching to a decision by a Court on an issue of law will not be affected, even if the decision is subsequently disapproved by a Full Bench of the High Court to which that Court is subordinate.(1) Where the question is one not purely of law, but of mixed law and fact, there will be res judicata. In such case the law has been applied to a particular state of facts, and if these facts come again in issue in another suit, the judgment on these facts, whether it rightly or wrongly applies the law, is res judicata.(2) So where in a previous suit a particular stipulation, contained in a particular kabuliat, had been held to be valid as between the parties, it was held not open to the Court subsequently to try the issue, whether that particular stipulation was valid or not, the question being a mixed question of law and fact, and whether the previous decision was or was not erroneous.(3) It has been recently held that though where the question is one of law the judgment is res judicata where the parties seek to litigate again on the same cause of action, yet where the dispute relates to matters which had formed a subsidiary consideration in the former suit, though the causes of action in the suits may be different, the application of this principle is limited to matters distinctly put in issue and determined in the former suit and to questions of fact or mixed questions of fact and law.(4) The Madras High Court has held that a Court is precluded from inquiry into the soundness of the law of the previous decision in respect of the precise subject-matter or immediate purpose of that suit; but that provided the decision in the latter suit does not in any way question the correctness of the former decree or in any way affect its operation, an erroneous decision on a question of law in a previous suit is no bar.(5) The operation of a decree as res judicata, so far at any rate as the subject-matter of a direct adjudication contained in the decree is concerned, can in no way be affected, in the absence of fraud or collusion, by the fact that the suit was the result of a mistake of law, or that the decree proceeded on such mistake. The remedy, if any, in such a case can only be by way of review, and not by separate suit for relief on the ground of mistake.(6)

As regards a question of pure law, it has been said that anomalous results might arise if an erroneous decision on a pure question of law in a previous suit is held to operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit relating to a different subject-matter, for an erroneous decision might have the effect of altering the law applicable as between the parties. Though the language of this section may perhaps make it apply to such a case, it is very doubtful whether it was intended to have such application.(1) It has been submitted that the facts decided in the first suit cannot be disputed, and for the purpose of the conclusiveness of those facts, but no further, the law applied must be accepted. Thus, if a decree in a suit to declare a mortgage invalid proceed upon the constitutionality of a statute, the parties afterwards cannot deny the validity of the statute in question, when the mortgagee attempts to foreclose. It could hardly be true that they could not raise the question again in a suit upon a different subject-matter.(2) A previous construction of law between the parties, it has been held,(3) ought not to be followed after that law has been replaced by another. So a decision upon a point of limitation given when either Act XIV. of 1859 or Act IX. of 1871 was in force, and which was subsequently held to be erroneous, was also held not to be res judicata in a suit which was brought when the present Limitation Act was in force.(4) In a recent case in the Calcutta High Court where, after the preliminary decree in a mortgage and before the final decree, the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act was extended to the district in which the property was situate, it was held that the sale was forbidden by that Act and the judgment-debtor was not estopped from bringing this to the notice of the Court (5)

The matter directly and substantially in issue in the second suit or issue must be the same matter which was directly and substantially in issue in a former suit.—The former judgment is conclusive only upon the same matter.(6) Where causes of action are different the principle

"It was no doubt with a view to elucidating the subject that the Legislature, in enacting Act X. of 1877, discarded the term 'cause of action.' The question chiefly to be considered is whether the matter decided in the previous suit was in substance part of the cause of action in the second suit, and the matter cannot be said to have been determined in the previous suit, unless it was put in issue and directly determined:" Caspersz, op. cit. 328 [and see Rajah of Pittapur v. Sri Rajah Row Buchi Sittaya Garu, L. each particular case.(1) The rule is that where a final decree is couched in general terms, the extent to which it ought to be regarded as res judicata can only be determined by ascertaining what were the real matters of controversy in the cause.(2) The leading principles of res judicata were thus enunciated by Sir William de Grey in the Duchess of Kingston's case.(3) "From the variety of cases relative to judgments being given in evidence in civil suits, these two deductions seem to follow as generally true: first, that the judgment of a Court of concurrent jurisdiction, directly upon the point, is, as a plea, a bar, or as evidence, conclusive, between the same parties, upon the same matter, directly in question in another Court; secondly, that the judgment of a Court of exclusive jurisdiction, directly upon the point, is, in like manner, conclusive upon the same matter, between the same parties, coming incidentally in question in another Court, for a different purpose. But neither the judgment of a concurrent or exclusive jurisdiction is evidence of any matter which came collaterally in question, though within their jurisdiction, nor of any matter incidentally cognizable, nor of any matter to be inferred by argument from the judgment."(4) Provided the immediate subject of the decision be not withdrawn from its operation so as to defeat the direct object of the decision, the parties may litigate matters incidentally or collaterally in issue between them for any other purpose as to which they may come in question. The test applicable is whether the question decided in the previous suit was in substance part of the cause of action, or whether it was only ancillary to the main cause.(5) The cases upon this branch of the rule of res judicata may be divided into two classes. (6) (a) The class of cases in which it has been held that the matter directly and substantially in issue in the second suit, or in an issue in such second suit, was, not directly and substantially, but collaterally or incidentally, dismissing the suit upon findings which fall short of going to the very root of the title upon which the claim rests, cannot operate as res judicata, but if such previous judgment does negative the title itself, the plaintiff cannot re-agitate the same question of title by suing to obtain relief for a subsequent item of the obligation.(1) The plaintiff cannot re-agitate the same question of liability upon the pure and simple incident that the subject-matter of the latter suit is geographically distinct from the subject-matter of the previous suit,(2) or that the suits related to different years.(3) A decree which has been made without jurisdiction cannot work an estoppel by judgment.(4) Upon the question as to what may be looked to, in order to see what has been in issue in a previous suit, and what has been actually decided, the rule to be gathered from the case-law is (5) that, although the decree in a former suit operates as res judicata, the decree is to be construed with reference to the pleadings,(6) judgment,(7) and the record,(8) in order to see what was in issue; and that even the acts of the parties immediately after the decree are very important to fix the meaning of indefinite terms in it.(9) One of the criteria of the identity of two suits, in considering a plea of res judicata, is to inquire whether the same evidence would support them both.(1) "At one time the test applied to discover whether a finding was incidental or not, was the fact of its being embodied in, or excluded from, the decree, and many cases appear to have been expressly decided upon this ground. Two propositions, however, appear to be well settled: (a) that the decree itself is not the test of what is or is not res judicata, but that the question in each case is, What did the Court really decide? Res judicata, in other words, is matter of substance; (2) (b) that where the decree of a Court is not based upon a finding, but is, in spite of it,(3) such a finding, cannot work an estoppel."(4) A finding in a judgment to operate as res judicata, the Court being a Court of jurisdiction competent to try the subsequent suit, must be material and necessary to support the precise and particular ground or grounds on which the decree, or some operative part of it, was made, otherwise the finding must be considered either as superseded by the decree, or as entirely immaterial, or as no more than incidental and subsidiary to the main question in the suit, although in the latter case the finding may have been necessary to the decision of the suit. A matter cannot be said to be "directly and substantially in issue," unless and until it is, or becomes, material for the decision of the suit to find as to it.(5) There is no such thing as constructive estoppel. The question is not whether the previous judgment was right, but whether it finally decided the matter in issue.(6) The fact that the reasoning upon which a former judgment was based was equally applicable to the second case, has been held (7) not to give the former judgment the force of res judicata in the second case. The rejection of applications to set aside an ex parte decree under O. IX. r. 13 (formerly sect. 108), post, and sale in execution thereof under O. XXI. r. 89 (formerly sect. 311), post, relate only to specific matters in that suit, and is therefore no bar to a fresh suit to set aside the decree on the ground that the whole suit was fraudulent.(8) The finding of a Criminal Court is not, of course, res judicata in a civil action, and no fact found or proved in a Criminal Court is on that account to be taken to be proved in a Civil Court (vide ante, "Suit").

Explanation I.—See note, ante, on word "Try."

Explanation II.—See note, post, on competency of jurisdiction.

Explanation III.—This Explanation provides that the matter must, in the former suit, have been alleged by one party, and either denied or admitted, expressly or impliedly, by the other.(9) In order to constitute the bar of res

judicata, it is not sufficient merely that an issue on the same point should have been raised in the former suit, although that issue may have been incidentally decided, but it must appear that the matter referred to was alleged by one party, and either denied, or admitted expressly or impliedly, by the other,(1) and the issue must further have been a material one.(2) Matter not put in question by the parties, and not necessary to the adjudication of the subject-matter of the suit, is immaterial, and any observation of the Court thereupon is obiter dictum, which can have no effect in any other litigation.(3) The rule of English law, that where the allegation on record is uncertain there is no res judicata, is also the rule embodied in this section. "If a thing be not directly and precisely alleged, it shall be no estoppel." That rule is reproduced in this explanation.(4) Matter alleged in the written statements of the parties may in subsequent proceedings be relevant as an admission; but it will not operate as an estoppel, unless, being admitted or denied, and found in favour of the person alleging it, it forms the basis of judicial decision.(5)

Explanation IV.—This Explanation deals with matters constructively in issue in a former suit,(6) providing that any matter which might and ought to have been made ground of defence or attack in a former suit, shall be deemed to have been a matter directly and substantially in issue in such suit.(7) In

F. & J. 168) and Henderson v. Henderson (3 Hare, 115), both of which decisions were largely relied upon before the enactment of the Code of 1877. And even since the enactment of the Explanation now to be considered, the cases have been far from uniform" (Caspersz, op. cit. 402, 403, and see Broughton, 46–56). The principle embodied in the above Explanation in 1877 had already been asserted and acted upon by the Judicial Committee [Srimut Rajah Mootto v. Katama Natchiar, 11 M. I.A. 50, 73; 10 W. R., P. other words, neither party can decline to meet an issue tendered by the other, and then maintain that it has not become res judicata. The plaintiff must support all the issues necessary to maintain his cause of action. The defendant must bring forward all the defences which he has to the cause of action asserted in the plaintiff's pleadings. But the plaintiff is under no obligation to tender issues not necessary to support his cause of action, nor is the defendant required to meet issues not tendered by the plaintiff.(1) The principle has been applied to applications for execution where the point might have been, but was not, raised in the suit.(2) A litigant cannot re-open a case on materials which might have been laid before the Court in the first trial; but the discovery of additional evidence, not originally available (for instance, evidence proving that a decree against him was obtained by perjury) will enable him to apply for a review of judgment under O. XLVII. r. 1.(1)

It depends upon the particular facts of each case to say whether a matter ought to have been made ground for defence or attack in a former suit.(2) The Explanation is intended to meet the case of a point which properly belonged to the subject of litigation in a former suit, and which the parties, exercising reasonable diligence, might then have brought forward.(3) The object of the Explanation would seem to be to compel the plaintiff to rely on all grounds which were open to him in support of the claim made by his plaint.(4) "If the parties have had an opportunity of controverting it, that is the same thing as if the matter had been actually controverted and decided."(5) Although upon a literal interpretation of the words of the Explanation, it might be argued that a point not raised, and not decided in a previous litigation, might still be taken as conclusive in a subsequent suit between the parties, yet upon a proper construction of the section, the question ought not and cannot be treated as res judicata unless there is a judicial determination, express or implied, on the matter not put directly in issue.(6) Where, however, separate rights have been infringed, separate actions may be maintained, since the infringement of separate rights gives rise to separate causes of action.(7) The principal consideration is whether it is precisely the same cause of action in both. And one great criterion of this identity is that the same evidence will maintain both actions.(8) The real test is whether the cause of action or transaction on which the two suits are based is the same, and not whether the transaction is sought to be established in different modes or by different means.(9) When, however, independent grounds of action are available, a party is not bound to unite them all in one suit, though he is bound to bring before the Court all grounds of attack available to him with reference to the title which is made the ground of action.(1) The question what is a different title is one of great practical difficulty, and must be decided upon the circumstances of each case separately.(2) All that this Explanation enjoins is that every ground which could and ought to have been urged in support of the claim actually made in the suit, shall be deemed to have been adjudicated upon therein, whether it was actually urged or not.(3) This Explanation applies only to cases in which the plaintiff, having on a former occasion sued for certain relief on the strength of one title, afterwards claims the same relief on the ground of another title, of which he might have availed himself in the former suit. It does not apply to cases where the subject-matters of the two suits are different; (4) nor to cases where no relief was asked for or granted as against the particular person in the former suit though he was a party to it.(5) The word "might" presupposes that the claim to be barred must be within the knowledge of the person during the first suit.(6) It was proposed to add to this Explanation the words "and to have been heard and finally decided so far as the subject-matter of the former suit was concerned and no further," which was stated to be intended to meet such cases as rent suits, in which, unless the question of title is expressly raised, such question is only incidental and not a matter directly and substantially in issue in the suit. The addition, however, has apparently been considered unnecessary. It has been held that if the effect of a decision in a suit is necessarily inconsistent with a defence which ought to have been raised (but was not raised) that defence must under this section be deemed to have been finally decided against the defendant who ought to have raised it.(1)

Explanation V.—According to the provisions of this Explanation, any relief claimed in the plaint, which is not expressly granted by the decree, shall, for the purpose of the section, be deemed to have been refused.(2) The legal effect of this Explanation is that of treating the omission to grant the relief asked for in the plaint as equivalent to an express refusal, and the claim thereto in a fresh suit as res judicata.(3) This Explanation refers to relief applied for, which the Court is bound to grant with reference to the matters directly and substantially in issue.(4) The words "relief claimed" apply only to something which forms part of the "claim" strictly so-called, that is, something which the plaintiff may claim as of right, something included in his cause of action and which if he establishes his cause of action the Court has no discretion to refuse. They do not include something which the plaintiff cannot in the suit claim as of right, but can only claim in the sense of an appeal to the discretion of the Court and which the Court may refuse in the exercise of its discretion on grounds of general expediency or otherwise even if the cause of action is fully established.(5) Even if the suit, as regards the relief claimed, has been wrongly dismissed, the plaintiff cannot sue again for the same relief.(6) The Explanation does not apply where the Court is silent on a head of relief only claimed as ancillary to the main relief, and which by implication is rather granted than refused. It only applies where the Court is silent on an independent head of relief, claimed and duly controverted.(7) A decree cannot be superseded by the mere omission of the Court executing the decree to pass orders on a claim made under it.(8)

The former suit must have been a suit between the same parties or between parties under whom they or any of them claim, litigating under the same title.—This is an application of the principle contained in the maxim, res inter alios acta alteri nocere non debet; what is transacted between one set of persons ought not to injure or affect another person. Judgments and decrees only bind parties and privies.(1) A person who is no party to a decree is not bound by it.(2) "Parties," in the larger legal sense, are all persons having a right to control the proceedings, to make defence, to adduce and cross-examine witnesses, and to appeal from the decision, if an appeal lies; and it may be added, those who assume such a right. The only extension given to this rule by Indian Courts is that a decree against a benamidar binds also the beneficial owner, in which case the parties are the same in fact though not in name.(3) If the verdict were not required to be between the same parties, a man might be bound by a decision who had not the liberty to cross-examine; and it is contrary to natural justice that a man should be injured by a determination that he or those under whom he claims were not at liberty to controvert.(4) Except in the case of judgments in rem,(5) and judgments relating to matters of a public nature,(6) which are governed by a different principle, no person is bound by a decision, unless he or those under whom he claims were parties to the proceedings in which it was given.(7) But it is reasonable that the same set of persons, or persons claiming under them, should be bound by previous proceedings concerning the same matter. There is no hardship in holding that a man shall be bound by that which would have bound those under whom he claims quoad the subject-matter of the claim, for he who feels the advantage, ought also to feel the burden (qui sentit commodum, sentire debet et onus), and no man can, save in certain cases excepted by the Statute law and the law merchant, transfer to another a better right than he himself possesses.(8) Persons other than the parties to a suit have been divided (9) into three classes, with reference to their position as affected by the judgment:—

(a) Persons who claim under the parties to the former suit, or, in the language of English law, privies to those parties.(10)

(10) In the law of estoppel one person becomes privy of another, (1) by succeeding to the position of that other as regards the subject of the estoppel, e.g., an assignee or grantee; (2) by holding in subordination to that other, e.g., the case of a landlord and tenant. The ground of privity is property, not personal relation. To make a man privy to an action he must have acquired an interest in the subject-matter of the action either by inheritance, succession, or purchase from a party subsequently to the action, or he must hold property subordinately. Thus an assignee is not estopped by a judgment against the assignor obtained after the assignment: Bigelow on Estoppel, 5th ed. 142–144. A person is said to claim under another when he derives his title through that other by assignment or otherwise: Sundar Lal v. Chhitar Mal, 29 A. 1, 3 (1906). A privity exists between an execution creditor and a

(b) Persons who, though not claiming under the parties to the former suit, were represented by them therein.(1) Such are persons interested in the estate of a testator or intestate, in relation to the executor or administrator; shareholders in a company,(2) in relation to the registered officer of that company; and in India, members of a joint and undivided family, in relation to a member who has sufficiently represented their interests in a former suit.(3)

(c) Strangers, who are neither privies to, nor represented by, the parties to the former suit.

The general rule is that, in the absence of fraud,(4) an adjudication is binding upon the parties to a suit or persons claiming under or represented by them, but upon these only. It must be shown that the party in the former suit represented the interest claimed in the latter suit. A party represents all interests owned by him at the time of the action or subordinate to his, though belonging to others. A decision against him will bind interests acquired by him subsequently, and all subordinate interests represented by him whensoever acquired.(5) The nature and object of the former suit must be regarded in order to ascertain who was really and substantially the litigant.(6) When once it is made clear that the self-same right and title is substantially in issue in two suits, the precise form in which either suit was brought, or the fact that the plaintiff in the one case was the defendant in the other, is immaterial.(7) And the fact that there are other parties, introduced in the subsequent litigation, does not alter the case; the estoppel subsists between the parties who were parties to the former litigation.(8) But there is no res judicata where the subsequent decision is not between the parties or those claiming under them.(9) The decision in a suit by one of two zemindars against the other as to the right to the profit rental of a bazaar was held by the Privy Council not to be res judicata in a subsequent suit for possession of a share of the bazaar, in which suit all the parties, plaintiffs, and defendants, claimed under the plaintiff in the former suit. Such a plea, however, might well be a defence to a hostile claim by persons asserting a title under the defendant zemindar in the former suit, against their claiming under the plaintiff zemindar in that suit.(1) A decision of a material issue in a suit against one who is the representative of an estate, bars a suit by the true owner on the same issue.(2) And a representative of the person is bound by a decree against the person whom he represents; but it is essential that there should be an adjudication as to the fact that he is representative.(3) A verdict against a man suing in one capacity will not estop him when he sues in another distinct capacity, and, in fact, is a different person.(4) The principle of res judicata has no application in a dispute between parties all of whom claim under the person in whose favour the decision in the previous suit was given.(5)

Hindu widow.— A decree fairly and properly obtained against a Hindu widow, relating to her husband's estate, binds the reversionary heirs, the whole estate being for the time vested in her, absolutely for some purposes, though in some respects for a qualified interest.(6) It was held under the Limitation Act of 1859, that when the widow as plaintiff sues to recover the husband's estate, held adversely to her by the defendant, a decree against her would bind the reversioner and that adverse possession, which would bar her right of suit, if she were alive, on the ground of limitation, would equally bar that of the reversioner.(7) But under Article 141 of the present Act, it has been decided that a reversioner who succeeds to immoveable property has twelve years to bring his suit for possession from the time when his estate falls into possession.(1) A decree in a suit by a reversioner against the widow for a declaration that she cannot dispose of the property purchased by her out of the profits of her husband's estate, and that her alienation is null and void, except as regards her own interest, will not bind a new reversioner, should the plaintiff predecease the widow, although it "would be so strong an authority in point as to deter either party from disputing it;" (2) or in a suit to restrain waste brought by a reversioner, who subsequently predeceased the widow, as against the new reversioner.(3) In a recent Full Bench decision of the Allahabad High Court it was held that a Hindu widow can not only alienate her life-interest, but also can transfer the corpus of her deceased husband's estate (even without legal necessity or for a pious purpose) so that the transfer shall not be void, but only voidable by the reversioner.(4) It has also been held that only the nearest reversioner is entitled to a declaration that a mortgage by a Hindu widow is not binding on reversioners.(5) Where by the terms of her husband's will a Hindu widow was the full representative of his estate, a decree against her declaring that the will was revoked, and that the appellant was entitled to succeed ab intestato, was held to bind the respondent, whose claim was by-appointment from the widow under the will, whether or not he was a party to the suit in which the decree was made.(6) Where a Hindu widow and her son, the then presumptive heir to property claimed by the widow, obtained a decree against a more remote reversionary heir, and the son predeceased his mother, and the person against whom the decree had been obtained became the next reversionary heir, it was held in a suit for possession by him, that the decree in the previous suit did not operate as res judicata.(7) For a case in which it was held that the reversioners were not affected by a former judgment, on the ground that in the suit in which it was given they merely represented the interest of their predecessor, the life-tenant, see below.(8) In a more recent case it was held, referring to two of the Privy Council decisions already cited, that where there are several reversioners successively entitled to succeed to property for the time being in the possession of a Hindu female, a decree in a suit by some of such reversioners will not necessarily constitute res judicata in respect of a similar suit brought by other reversioners.(9) An appellant having been a party to a former suit, in which the respondent obtained a decree for possession of the estate in question as mother and heiress of the last proprietor, is barred by such decree from afterwards recovering possession, on the ground that the respondent is not such heiress. Although such decree barred the appellant from setting up in this suit a family custom for the purpose of showing that he was entitled to possession during the life of the respondent, he is not thereby debarred from showing that upon her death, if he survives, he will be entitled, under such custom, to succeed her, and therefore to have a certain deed executed by her declared illegal and inoperative after her death.(1)

Benamidar.—Where the parties are parties in fact, although not in name, as in the case of a person who buys an estate for himself, but has it conveyed benami in the name of another, a decree properly obtained by or against the benamidar is binding upon the real owner, the presumption being that the benamidar instituted the suit with his authority and consent.(2)

Co-defendants.—Where it was broadly contended that there would be no res judicata, as between co-defendants, it was held that such contention was incorrect. Section 11 does not preclude the decisions upon any issue from operating as res judicata, merely because the issue is raised as between co-defendants, if the matter was directly and substantially in issue in a former suit, and the other necessary conditions are satisfied. The words "between the same parties" in this section, qualify not only the words "former suit," but the whole expression "in issue in a former suit." Therefore an issue raised and decided as between co-defendants in a former suit may be res judicata in a subsequent suit, in which they are arranged as plaintiff and defendant.(3) When the same parties were contending in the former suit, in fact though not in form, as where they were co-defendants on the record, but their interests were different, and there was an issue between them which was decided; its decision is a bar to a second suit or defence raising the same issue between them, when in the position of plaintiff and defendant.(4) The rule has been stated to be, that where an adjudication between the defendants is necessary to give the appropriate relief to the plaintiff, the adjudication will be res judicata between the defendants as well as between the plaintiff and defendants. But for this effect to arise, there must be a conflict of interests between the defendants, and a judgment defining the real rights and obligations of the defendants inter se. Without necessity, a judgment will not be res judicata amongst defendants, nor will it be res judicata amongst them by mere inference from the fact that they have been collectively defeated in resisting a claim to a share made against them as a group.(1) A decree for partition is not like a decree for money or the delivery of specific property, which is only in favour of the plaintiff in the suit. It is a joint declaration of the rights of persons interested in the property of which partition is sought, and such a decree, when properly drawn up, is in favour of each shareholder or set of shareholders having a distinct share.(2) As to the effect of a partition decree as constituting res judicata as against the plaintiff (3) and between co-defendants,(4) see the undermentioned cases.

cause of action for the injured party in the case of either a joint contract or a joint tort; and that cause of action is exhausted and satisfied by a judgment being obtained by the plaintiff against all or any of the joint contractors or joint wrongdoers whom he chooses to sue.(1) But the rule is otherwise where there is a joint and several liability; a decree against one of several joint and several promisors without satisfaction will not bar a second suit.(2) And in the under-mentioned case a decision in a suit against a banian was held not to be res judicata in a suit for the same money against a manager, the liability not being joint but being based on distinct contracts.(3) Conversely, where a plaintiff has failed in a suit against one of several joint debtors, a judgment recovered by one of such debtors cannot be pleaded as a defence to a subsequent action against the other joint debtors in respect of the same cause, unless the plea shows that the judgment was recovered on a ground which operated as a discharge of all.(4) It has, however, been more recently held by the Allahabad High Court that the effect of sect. 43 of the Contract Act being to exclude the right of a joint contractor to be sued along with his co-contractors, the rule laid down in King v. Hoare, and Kendall v. Hamilton, supra, is no longer applicable to cases arising in India, at all events in the Mofussil since the passing of that Act, and a judgment obtained against some only of the joint contractors and remaining unsatisfied is no bar to a second suit on the contract against the other joint contractors.(5)

Father of joint Hindu family.—Where the Hindu son in a joint family becomes entitled by reason of his birth and in his own right, a right which he can enforce against his father, he does not claim under him within the meaning of this section.(6) Therefore the dismissal of a suit for redemption of a mortgage of joint family property brought by the father in a joint Hindu family alone was held not a bar to a subsequent suit for redemption by the sons, inasmuch as their title was not through their father, but was separate and independent.(7) The question whether a Hindu father in a particular suit, in which he alone of the family is a party, represents his co-parceners is a question to be decided with reference to the circumstances of the case. Held therefore, under the circumstances of the case, that an erroneous decree in ejectment obtained against a Hindu father was not res judicata in a subsequent suit by the son for recovery of the holding.(1) An auction-purchaser of the right of a Hindu father in joint property cannot raise the plea that a mortgage was made without legal necessity as long as there is still time for the sons to challenge the purchase.(2) The obligation of a Hindu son to pay his father's debt is not an obligation which he had incurred jointly with his father; and the creditor's cause of action against the father and the son is not a single cause of action which is exhausted upon a decree being obtained against one of them only. A judgment recovered, against his father only, does not therefore bar a suit against the son.(3) Where the plaintiff had sued the defendant's father for a declaration of his right to a share of property, which he claimed as ancestral property governed by Mitakshara law, and had obtained a decree, the defendant's father's plea of a custom of primogeniture being rejected, it was held in a subsequent suit by the plaintiff for partition of the property that the defendant (who had not been a party to the former suit) was barred from pleading a custom of primogeniture.(4)

Manager of same. -The manager of a joint Hindu family suing or being sued acts in a representative capacity. He can execute decrees on behalf of the joint family and receive payments and give receipts which will be binding on it.(5) Where, therefore, the interest of a joint and undivided family being in issue, one member of the family prosecuted or defended a suit, such a decree may afterwards be considered as binding upon all the members of the family, their interest being sufficiently represented in the suit,(6) and the presumption being that he is acting for the family, unless it were made out that he acted and professed to act for himself alone.(7) In defining, however, the relation of the managing member to the joint family and estate we are brought into contact with a relationship which has no counterpart in English law, neither the term partner nor principal, nor agent, nor even co-parcener will strictly apply.(8)

Karnavan.—The karnavan or managing member of a Malabar tarwad (family) is in a similar position to a Hindu father under the Mitakshara law. And a decree against him may in some cases bind the members.(9) It was, however, later held by a Full Bench reviewing the preceding cases that a decree in a suit in which the karnavan of a nambudri illom or marumakkatayam tarwad is, in his representative capacity, joined as a defendant, and which he honestly defends, is binding upon the other members of the family not actually made parties.(1)

Shebait.—Where a shebait has incurred debts in the service of an idol, for the benefit and preservation of its property, his position is analogous to that of a manager for an infant heir,(2) and decrees properly obtained against him in respect of debts so incurred are binding upon succeeding shebaits. For if such debts and the judgments founded upon them were not held to be thus binding on successors, the consequence would be that no shebait would be able to obtain assistance in times of need.(3)

Managers. Guardians.—In the case cited below,(4) the decision of a Forest Settlement Officer, upon an inquiry held under the Boundary Act of 1860, at which inquiry the plaintiff, then a minor, was represented by a manager of his estate appointed under sect. 8 of Regulation V. of 1804, was held to be res judicata in a suit to recover the land. A manager of an estate, who has obtained a certificate under Act XL. of 1858, is the guardian of infant co-proprietors, and represents them fully in suits for money advanced in reference to the estate.(5) The fact that the plaintiff, a minor, had through his guardian actively intervened in proceedings to set aside a sale of property in which he and his father were jointly interested as members of a Mitakshara family, was held to be no bar to a suit to recover the property, the purchaser having at the sale acquired the interest of the father only.(6)

Minor.—To maintain the plea of res judicata it must appear that the person whose interest it is sought to bind was in some way a party to the suit. An intention that a suit should be for the benefit of a minor is insufficient. The minor must be properly represented in it.(7) A decree passed against an infant properly represented is binding upon him like a decree passed against an adult, but it is open to the infant to impeach such decree by a separate suit in cases where his guardian has been guilty of fraud or negligence in allowing the decree to be passed against him.(1) It is only where fraud or negligence is proved on the part of the guardian of a minor that the right to bring a suit to set aside a previous decision can be claimed by a minor or his administrator; where no fraud or negligence is proved a previous decision will operate as a bar.(2)

Mortgagor.—The acts of a mortgagor prior to the mortgage bind his mortgagee; (3) but his acts subsequent to the mortgage do not; so that a suit by the mortgagor subsequent to his mortgage, and not brought at the instance or with the concurrence of the mortgagee, does not bind the latter.(4) The proprietor of an estate cannot be said to represent the whole estate after he has mortgaged it.(5) A decree obtained by the mortgagees against the original mortgagors, the vendors of the appellants, was held to be no evidence against the appellants, purchasers of the interests of the mortgagors, if they were no parties to that decree, and if the transfer to them was before the institution of the suit in which that decree was passed; and the purchasers were in no way bound by the result of that suit.(6) Where a mortgagor obtained a decree for redemption, which was not executed, and subsequently sold the equity of redemption to the plaintiff, who sued the mortgagee for redemption, it was held that the suit was not barred by the former decree, as the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee had not been terminated, and the right to redeem was inseparable from the relation as long as it existed.(7)

Lessor and Lessee.—A lessee claims under his lessor, but a lessor does not claim under his lessee, so that a decision in a suit by the lessee to eject a stranger does not bar a suit by the lessor against the same person with the same object.(8) So also decrees obtained against the registered tenants of a tenure were held inadmissible in evidence against the real owner of the tenure, who was not a party to the suits obtained, and who did not claim through the parties against whom the decrees were passed.(1) And a suit by a lessor against a raiyat to set aside a pottah is not barred by the fact that the pottah has been declared genuine in a suit by the plaintiff's ticcadar against the same defendant.(2) Where two persons each claim title to land in the possession of a tenant, and one of them sues the tenant for rent in a competent Court, and the other intervenes and claims title, and the issue is contested and finally decided that the tenant should pay his rent to one of them, the title cannot be contested in a subsequent suit between the two claimants.(3) A decree obtained in a previous suit for rent by an ijaradar does not operate against the tenant as res judicata on the question whether the relation of landlord and tenant exist in a subsequent suit for rent brought by the superior landlord.(4) As to suits for the recovery of cesses (5) and rents, see cases also below.(6) On dismissal of a suit for rent on denial of relationship of landlord and tenant, the plaintiff may sue again for ejectment;(7) though where the tenant sets up his own title to the land, the decision on the issue of title may be res judicata.(8)

Partition.—The right to enforce it is a legal incident of a joint tenancy, and as long as such tenancy subsists so long may any of the joint tenants apply to Court for partition.(9)

Different titles.—The words "litigating under the same title" do not refer to the identity of the ground of action, but mean that the question must have been raised and decided in the same right, that is to say, in the right of the parties to the second suit and not in the right of any other person. Thus if one is made defendant in an official capacity, the judgment will not bind him personally, and vice versâ. A plaintiff suing as next heir to his uncle was held not barred by a decision against his father, inasmuch as he claimed under a title not derived from his father.(10) A suit against an elder brother for maintenance was held not to be barred by a previous order made upon other grounds dismissing a claim for maintenance against the father. The adjudication in the previous suit was not between the brothers, but between the plaintiff and his father, and was based upon a different sort of claim.(1) A suit by persons representing the public is not barred by a decision in a previous suit by the same plaintiff in their individual and private capacity.(2) In a previous suit in which plaintiff had been a party it had been attempted to assert plaintiff's title to a piece of land occupied by the defendants by proving that they held the same by virtue of an alleged specific lease. The Court had held that no such lease had been executed. Plaintiff now claimed the land as belonging to his devasan, and sued to recover it on the strength of his title; he also set up the alleged lease once more. Held, that though the question of the validity of the lease was res judicata, plaintiff was at liberty to sue also on the strength of his title, independently of the lease, and he was not estopped from so suing by the fact that the former suit had been based upon the lease alone.(3) A claim on a kanam is a claim arising ex contractu, while a claim on title against a trespasser is founded on tort.(4)

Miscellaneous.—The purchaser of land at a sale by the Government for the recovery of arrears of revenue under the sale laws, buys free of encumbrances, and is therefore not bound by the decision in a suit brought by or against the former owner.(5) It has been held in Madras that a priest of a temple, as the representative of a former priest, is bound by a decree in a suit brought by the latter to establish his right to damages for the invasion of his rights as priest.(6) The co-sharer of an estate cannot be bound by a decision in a suit for rent brought by another co-sharer against a tenant.(7) Where all the conditions prescribed by sect. 11 exist, the fact that in the first suit the defendant was an execution creditor and in the second he is a purchaser at an execution sale makes no difference as to the second suit being res judicata. A privity exists between an execution creditor and a purchaser at a Court sale, the latter representing the former in so far as he had a right to bring the property to sale in execution of his decree.(8) As to a suit by the karnam of a mitta; (9) by one claiming as the dharmakarta of a devasthanam; (10) and by one of five trustees in whom the uraima right over a devasan was vested; (11) see the cases noted below. Explanation VI.—This Explanation provides that where persons litigate bonâ fide in respect of a public or private right claimed in common for themselves and others, all persons interested in such right shall, for the purpose of the section, be deemed to claim under the persons so litigating.(1) It has been held that the Courts should be careful in their application of this Explanation, which should not be applied to any case which does not come within its very wording; (2) and that it only applies to cases where several different persons claim an easement or other right under one common title, as for instance, where the inhabitants of a village claim by custom a right of pasturage over the same tract of land, or to take water from the same spring or well.(3) And, therefore, it does not apply to a prescriptive right claimed by an individual in respect of his own house and premises.(4) This Explanation does not refer to the case of a defendant at all but only to the case of a plaintiff.(5) But it is not in terms so limited. One party having a right in common with others is not at liberty or authorized to sue in his own name to establish the right of the others except by their authority. This Explanation must therefore be read with the provisions of rule 3, post, and the principles to be found in that rule.(6) A right to relief can be said to be claimed "in common" only as between parties who would be benefited by such relief if granted, and who have such an interest in the relief claimed that they could join as co-plaintiffs.(7) The inclusion of public rights in the amended Explanation is to give due effect to suits relating to public nuisances, as to which see the new sect. 91, post.

The Court which decided such former suit must have been a Court of jurisdiction competent to try such subsequent suit or the suit in which such issue is subsequently raised.—In order to make an adjudication by one Court final and conclusive in another Court, the first Court must have been possessed of a jurisdiction (8) sufficient to try the matter

which arose in the subsequent suit. In other words, a decision to be res judicata must have been passed by a Court having jurisdiction not only over the suit in which it was passed, but also over the subsequent suit in which it is pleaded as a res judicata. And since, according to the judicial system of British India, there are, throughout the country, Courts of different grades having jurisdiction in suits of different amounts, in certain prescribed local areas, the Courts must be of concurrent jurisdiction as regards both pecuniary (1) limit and subject-matter of the suit before the decision of one can be res judicata as to matter coming before the other Court. So where a previous suit was cognizable by the Munsif and was tried and determined by him, it was held that the judgment in the former suit was no bar as res judicata to the trial of a subsequent suit which was cognizable only by the Subordinate Judge and was tried by him.(2) And it has been held that neither the decision of a Revenue Court as between the plaintiff and third parties (whose rights had been set up by the defendants in that suit), (3) nor the decision of a Probate Court, can operate as res judicata in a subsequent title-suit.(4)

In the case of Misir Raghobardial v. Rajah Sheo Baksh Singh,(5) the Privy Council said: "Mussumat Edun v. Mussumat Bechun (6) may be referred to as the leading case on this subject. In that case the Chief Justice, Sir Barnes Peacock, held that the two Courts must be Courts of concurrent jurisdiction, and in order to make the decision of one Court final and conclusive in another Court, it must be a decision of a Court which would have had jurisdiction over the matter in the subsequent suit in which the first decision is given in evidence as conclusive.(7) As to what is a Court of concurrent jurisdiction, it is material to notice that there is in India a great number of Courts, that one main feature in the Acts constituting them is that they are of various grades with different pecuniary limits of jurisdiction, and that by the Code of Procedure a suit must be instituted in the Court of the lowest grade competent to try it. For instance, in Bengal, by the Bengal Civil Court Act, No. VI. of 1871, the jurisdiction of a Munsif extends only to original suits in which the amount or value of the subject-matter in dispute does not exceed Rs. 1000. The qualifications of a Munsif and the authority of his judgment would not be the same as those of a District or of a Subordinate Judge, who have jurisdiction in civil suits without any limit of amount. In their Lordships' opinion, it would not be proper that the decision of a Munsif upon (for instance) the validity of a will, or of an adoption in a suit for a small portion of the property affected by it, should be conclusive in a suit before a District Judge or in the High Court for property of a large amount, the title to which might depend upon the will or the adoption. Other similar cases are mentioned in the judgment of the Chief Justice. It is true that there is an appeal from the Munsif's decision, but that upon the facts would be to the District Court, and not to the High Court. And that the decision should be conclusive would be still more improper as regards many other of the various Courts in India, the qualifications of whose Judges differ greatly. By taking concurrent jurisdiction to mean concurrent as regards the pecuniary limit as well as the subject-matter, this evil or inconvenience is avoided; and although it may be desirable to put an end to litigation, the inefficiency of many of the Indian Courts makes it advisable not to be too stringent in preventing a litigant from proving the truth of his case." (1) And the Council, in a later portion of the judgment, say, "that by Court of competent jurisdiction, Act X. of 1877 means a Court which has jurisdiction over the matter in the subsequent suit in which the decision is used as conclusive, or, in other words, a Court of concurrent jurisdiction." The rule may be stated to be that the judgment in the previously decided suit must have been delivered either by a Court of exclusive or of concurrent jurisdiction upon a matter falling within such jurisdiction, and where the jurisdiction is concurrent the Court which adjudicated on the previously decided suit must have been such a Court as would have been competent to adjudicate upon the later suit. The question of whether any particular judgment is passed in the exercise of exclusive or concurrent or limited jurisdiction must depend upon the terms of the law upon which the judgment relies for its authority. It has been held that the bar of res judicata arises where the Court deciding the first suit was competent to try the same, and its inability to entertain it arose not from incompetence, but from the existence of another Court with a preferential jurisdiction.(2)

(1) The Privy Council, in Run Bahadur Singh v. Lucho Koer, supra, referring to the above remarks, further say:—"If this construction of the law were not adopted, the lowest Court in India might determine finally, and without appeal to the High Court, the title to the greatest estate in the Indian Empire." Ramdyal v. Jankidas, 2 Bom. L. R. 415 (1900); the extent of the jurisdiction depends on that of the Court in which the first suit was instituted at the time it was brought. In Panga v. Unnikatti, 24 M. 275 (1900), the suit was held to be res judicata, for though brought in the Subordinate Judge's Court, it ought, if rightly valued, to have been brought in the Munsif's Court in which the previous decision had been given: Ramdyal v. Jankidas, 24 B. 456 (1900).

It has also been held that "competent to try" means "competent to try with conclusive effect:" (1) and that concurrence of jurisdiction must exist not only as to the original Court, but also as to the appellate tribunals and their powers in the respective suits.(2) The Calcutta High Court, and later decisions in the Madras High Court, have, however, dissented from this view, holding that there was nothing in sect. 12 of the last Code to indicate that the judgments in two suits must be open to appeal in the same way, in order that the decision upon any issue in the earlier suit can bar the trial of the same issue in the later one. So it was held that the decision of an issue in a suit in which no second appeal lies to the High Court bars the trial of the same issue in a subsequent suit in which such second appeal is allowed.(3) And see now the new Explanation II. which is intended to affirm the view that the competence of the jurisdiction of a Court does not depend on the right of appeal from its decision. The word "competent" is further to be considered with reference to the time when the suit is brought, and the jurisdiction of the Court at that period. The words of the section must be taken to mean competent to try the subsequent suit if it had been brought at the same time that the former suit was brought.(4) A plaintiff cannot, however, evade the provisions of the Code by joining several causes of action against the same defendant in the subsequent suit and instituting it in a Court of superior jurisdiction.(5) In a recent case in the Bombay High Court, where the defendant in a suit for restitution of conjugal rights pleaded res judicata on the ground that plaintiff had filed a previous suit, though this had been dismissed for want of jurisdiction because the leave necessary under clause 12 of the Letters Patent had not first been obtained, it was held on second appeal that the former Court had not been "competent to try" and that there was no res judicata.(6)

The prevailing view as to the effect of an appealable decision is that it constitutes res judicata until appealed against, when it ceases to be such, and does not so operate again unless it is adopted by, and thus becomes the decision of, the Appellate Court.(7) Where there were decrees in cross suits on the same facts, and an appeal against one decree only, it was held that the decree unappealed was no bar to the decision of the appeal.(1) In a suit brought in the Agency Court at Kattiawar, relating to the villages in Kattiawar, the Court decided that there existed between the parties a custom of metap (i.e., right to an extra share by the senior member). A second suit was subsequently brought in a British Court as regards the villages belonging to the parties situate in the British territories, wherein plaintiffs alleged that the custom of metap did not exist in their family. It was contended, on behalf of the defendant, that the question was res judicata, on the ground that the test of competency to try the subsequent suit was whether the suit was one which in respect of its subject-matter and the valuation thereof could have been tried by the Agency Court, and that its exclusion on territorial grounds had not to be taken into account. The High Court declined to accept the contention, as not being consistent with the express terms of sect. 11 of the Code.(2) There can be no res judicata unless the Judge who made the decree in the previous suit had jurisdiction to try and decide, not only the particular matter in issue, but also the subsequent suit itself, in which the issue is subsequently raised.(3) of an inferior tribunal, to be prepared to show that the proceedings were within its jurisdiction. In the case of a Court of superior jurisdiction, the want of jurisdiction is not to be presumed.

A decree made without jurisdiction cannot operate as res judicata.(1) And the consent of parties will not give to a Court a jurisdiction which it does not otherwise possess.(2) But the jurisdiction of a Court to entertain and decide upon a cause of action depends upon the nature of the claim put forward by the plaintiff as his cause of action, and the matter involved in it; and does not depend upon what the defendant may assert by way of defence.(3)

Such matter must have been heard and finally decided by the Court in the former suit.—In order to operate as res judicata, the matter must have been heard and finally decided. There must have been a decision upon the matter alleged to be res judicata, which finally granted or withheld the relief sought in respect thereof. "Res judicata by its very words means a matter upon which the Court has exercised its judicial mind, and has come to the conclusion that one side is right, and has pronounced a decision accordingly. In my opinion, res judicata signifies that the Court has, after argument and consideration, come to a decision on a contested matter." (4) These words should be read to mean "heard and finally decided" by such Court, either if no appeal is preferred from its judgment, or if an appeal being preferred has been disposed of, and the judgment of the Appellate Court, which takes the place of its judgment, has decided the point.(5) "The conditions for the exclusion of jurisdiction, on the ground of res judicata, are that the same identical matter shall have come in question already in a Court of competent jurisdiction; that the matter shall have been controverted, and that it shall have been finally decided. That is just what sect. 13 requires, there must be a final decision." (6) As to judgments by consent, see post.

such as the Court making it could not alter (except on review) on the application of either party or reconsider of its own motion. Though this Explanation has been now omitted, the word "final" presumably has still the same meaning. A decision liable to appeal may be final within the meaning of this section until the appeal is made.(1) It is not, however, necessary, in order to justify a plea of res judicata, to show that the first case was fully entered into and discussed, either by oral or written testimony, where no question was raised but all the parties interested declared themselves satisfied on the point; (2) and a final decree is conclusive, notwithstanding it may have proceeded upon an erroneous view of the law.(3) It, however, generally speaking, follows from the rule which requires a hearing and final decision, that a finding which is inconclusive, or which is based upon technical points and which dismisses a suit for any reason not on the merits, will not operate as a bar; as where a demurrer was allowed; (4) or a suit is dismissed for misjoinder and failure to pay court-fees; (5) or improper valuation; (6) or because the permission of Government was not previously obtained; (7) or because of failure to give security for costs; (8) or on the ground of jurisdiction; (9) or non-joinder of all proper parties; (10) or as against a party whose name was ordered to be expunged from the record in a former suit; (11) or where a suit has been dismissed for failure to pay the costs of service of summons on the defendants; (12) or where a suit to remove an attachment is dismissed on the ground that the attachment has already been removed; (13) or where a suit has been dismissed on the ground that it was premature; (14) or wrongly framed.(15) In a suit to recover principal and interest due on a bond executed by the defendants in favour of the plaintiff's father (deceased), it appeared that the plaintiff had previously brought a similar suit, which was dismissed for the reason that the plaintiff produced no succession certificate: it was held that the previous proceedings did not bar the present suit.(1) And generally a case summarily dismissed for a technical defect or irregularity of any kind cannot operate as a res judicata.(2) Where a suit was dismissed, having regard to sect. 42 of Act I. of 1877, on the ground that the plaintiffs had omitted to sue for possession, the decision was held no bar under sect. 43 (corresponding with O. II. r. 2 of the present Code) to a suit for possession and to have a deed declared void.(3) In a recent case in the Allahabad High Court, two suits had been instituted by the plaintiff on the same day and in the same Court, he had made A. defendant to one and A. and S. defendants to the other, and both suits had been decided by a single judgment, followed by separate decrees. In the first suit A. appealed and in the other S. only. During the pendency of A.'s appeal, S. died and his appeal abated and the judgment in that suit became final. Held that the hearing of A.'s separate appeal was barred.(4) Where a party agreed to be bound by the oath of certain persons, and an issue was thus decided, this was held not to be an adjudication which would have the effect of an estoppel in subsequent proceedings.(5) No finding upon a question not directly put in issue, and no opinion incidentally expressed, can be regarded as a final judgment.(6) The dismissal of a suit under sect. 102 of the former Code (corresponding with O. IX. r. 8) for non-appearance was not intended to operate in favour of the defendant as res judicata. It imposes, however, when read with sect. 103 of the former Code (corresponding with O. IX. r. 9), a certain disability on the plaintiff whose suit has been dismissed. He is thereby precluded from bringing a fresh suit in respect of the same cause of action.(7) Where a plaintiff appeared in a suit and went into evidence, but before the evidence was closed made default and the case was dismissed, there was held to be a bar.(8) There is no such thing known to the law as constructive estoppel, and if there were it would not satisfy the require-nents of sect. 11. Where in a former suit between the same parties in which the ame claim upon title was made, a decree dismissed the suit, but the judgment n the former suit stated that it was left open to the plaintiff to sue again and hat no matters affecting the rights of the parties were decided between them, t was held that the prior decree was not a final decision within the meaning of the Code and the defence of res judicata was not maintained.(1) Where, though there has been a decision on other points, the matter of the second suit as literally not been determined in the previous suit, there can be as to it no es judicata.(2) The section does not apply where the former suit is withdrawn.(3) It has already been remarked that upon appeal a matter ceases o be res judicata. When a matter, although decided by the Court of first nstance or by the lower Appellate Court, is not decided by the last Court of Appeal, it has not been heard and finally decided. The fact of an appeal being in point of form dismissed is not conclusive as to every point decided by the lower Court.(4) As to the effect of withdrawal from a suit, see note below.(5) The dismissal of a claim after issue has been joined, because the plaintiff has failed to produce evidence to substantiate it, has the same effect as a dismissal founded upon evidence, and the subject-matter of such claim will be res judicata.(6) A subsisting judgment on an award is as binding as any other judgment.(7) As between the parties a decree arrived at after the taking of an oath on a question of fact in a case under the Oaths Act is none the less a final adjudication.(8) A judgment by consent is as effective an estoppel between the parties as a judgment whereby the Court exercises its mind on a contested cause.(9) And where a Court has heard and determined the case judicially, and there has been an appeal, which has been withdrawn owing to a compromise entered into by the parties, the original decision becomes a final decision and operates as a bar to a second suit.(1) When a decree is passed by consent of parties, the question whether or not the compromise on which such decree is based is valid, cannot be gone into on an appeal against that decree.(2) The Court, however, has jurisdiction to set aside a consent order upon any ground which would invalidate an agreement between the parties. So a consent order which had been completed and acted upon, but without affecting interests of third parties, was set aside by the Court on the ground of common mistake.(3) The test for determining whether there is an estoppel in any particular case is whether the parties decided for themselves the particular matter in dispute and the matter was expressly embodied in the decree passed on the compromise.(4) Compromises of suits by Hindu females are to be dealt with upon the principles applicable to alienations by them.(5) The rulings as to the effect of ex parte and unexecuted decrees in subsequent suits (a question which has been considered principally in connection with rent suits) are conflicting.(6) An ex parte decree is, when final, res judicata only so far as the decision necessarily decided an issue, but nothing more is concluded. The conclusive effect is confined to the point actually decided.(7) Thus an ex parte decree for rent concludes nothing more than that so much rent was due at a certain time from the tenant to his landlord, and assuming that the plaint goes no further, and makes no claim for a declaration as to the rate of the rent, the defendant having a proper opportunity to meet the case, the rate of rent is not res judicata, even although the decree may recite or declare the rate.(1) Such decrees generally will be held conclusive as to all matters which shall have been heard and decided on the merits. A defendant respondent cannot avoid the application of the principle of res judicata, by saying that he did not appear at the trial of the suit, and a plaintiff who has got an ex parte decree on proof of his title or on failure of the defendant to prove a defence, the onus of proving which was on him, cannot be deprived of the full benefit of the decree which he has obtained by the fact that the defendant did not appear in court to protect his own interest.(2) An ex parte decree in a suit for rent operates as res judicata upon the question of relation of landlord and tenant.(3) A finding on an issue not necessary for the determination of the suit will not effect a res judicata. Where an issue is not necessary for the decision of the suit in which it is raised, the decree, couched in general terms, does not cover the finding on that issue, nor can the insertion of such finding in the decree give it the force of res judicata. The Code does not contemplate findings on issues being inserted in it, and there is no section in the Code which makes it necessary to appeal from the decree, because such finding has been inserted in it.(4) A decree in a maintenance suit is not final in the sense that the rate fixed can never be altered. Altered circumstances may justify a suit for reduction of maintenance or a suit for its increase. If there be such altered circumstances a previous decision will be no bar.(5) An order of the Small Cause Court, made in a proceeding under sect. 278 of the former Code, is an order made in a suit within the meaning of sect. 37 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act (XV. of 1882), and as such is final.(6) A possessory suit filed in the Mamlatdar's Court was dismissed by the Mamlatdar on the merits. The plaintiff thereupon filed another suit under sect. 9 of the Specific Relief Act in a Civil Court which allowed the claim and passed a decree in his favour. It being contended that the Mamlatdar's decree barred the second suit, it was held that the Mamlatdar's decision was not conclusive.(7) Where there are conflicting decisions, the last decision operates as a bar.(8) of clause (a) and the omission altogether of the last clause of the former section, as to which, see post. A foreign judgment is a judgment of a foreign Court; as to the meaning of which term, see notes to sect. 2, ante, and ante "Court." A foreign judgment may be used in two ways. It may be either pleaded by a defendant as res judicata by way of defence to the claim made against him, or a suit may be brought to enforce it. Sects. 13 and 14 recognize the effect of a foreign judgment as res judicata, the latter section providing that whereupon, foreign judgment is relied on, the production of the document duly authenticated is presumptive evidence that the Court which made it had competence to pronounce it. jurisdiction.

All judgments, whether domestic or foreign, if delivered by a Court having no jurisdiction are void.(1) As regards competency, a question arose as to the meaning of the words "Court of jurisdiction competent to try such subsequent suit" in connection with foreign judgments. In the case of domestic judgments these words, as has been already stated, mean a Court having concurrent jurisdiction with the Court trying the subsequent suit, whether as regards the pecuniary limit of its jurisdiction or the subject-matter of the suit, to try it with conclusive effect.(2) The same construction has been given also with regard to foreign judgments: it being held that the mere fact that the actual (second) suit could not have been tried in the first Court did not matter; it being enough if a suit of that class could have been tried if the subject-matter of it had been within the local limits of that Court's jurisdiction.(3) it has been held that the determination of an issue as to adoption in a suit brought in the Court of a Native State for the recovery of land was conclusive on that question in a suit brought in a British Indian Court for the recovery of property in British territory.(4) It has, however, been doubted whether this decision is correct in so far as it holds that exclusion on territorial grounds is not to be taken into account, it being pointed out, with reference to the contention, that otherwise Explanation VII. of the former Code (now sect. 14) would be deprived of all meaning; that there are many suits which are within the jurisdiction both of a foreign and domestic Court, to which that Explanation would attach.(5) The existence of jurisdiction will primarily be determined with reference to the law of the country in which that Court may be situate and from the Government whereof it may derive its judicial power.(6) The Courts of other countries, however, are not bound and generally not inclined to recognize the jurisdiction as sufficient when it is conferred or exercised against the general principles of international law.(1) So in the under-mentioned case (2) it was held that the Baroda Court had no jurisdiction over the defendants who were British subjects residing in British territory.

The Indian Legislature, however, while recognizing foreign judgments as res judicata, did not adopt the view of the English Courts as to their absolute conclusiveness; (3) and qualified the general rule enacted in sect. 11 by a number of limitations embodied in sect. 13. Res judicata, in connection with foreign judgments, is only of limited extent. Jurisdiction and the existence of the other elements common to both domestic and foreign judgments were formerly both dealt with in sect. 11, but jurisdiction is now separately provide for in sect. 13 (a).

The other special limitations prescribed by sect. 13, in order that a foreign judgment may operate as res judicata, are—

1. It must have been given on the merits. So a judgment of dismissal of a suit, as barred by limitation, will not be deemed to be on the merits and therefore to operate as res judicata, except where that law not only bars the remedy but extinguishes the right itself.(4)

2. There must be no apparent mistake of International or Indian law.(5) In the under-mentioned case,(6) the Court relied on this clause in support of the view that the judgment of a Court having jurisdiction otherwise than in accordance with the general principles of International law would not be res judicata; but this clause has reference to the judgment itself and not to the question of jurisdiction, which is provided for in clause (a) and which must be dealt with on general principles. As appears from the words used, a mistake of fact does not bar the operation of res judicata, the judgment being a bar even though the foreign Court had come on the evidence to an erroneous conclusion as to the facts. Nor will a mistake as to the law of the country in which the judgment is passed, or of any country other than British India, affect the operation of the judgment as res judicata.(7)

3. It must not be contrary to natural justice. It is never advisable to limit the meaning of wide terms intentionally used by the Legislature. The words are wide enough, it has been said, to allow of an investigation into the moral rightness of the decision,(8) though they would not permit the Court to inquire into the merits on the simple ground that the conclusion drawn from the facts was erroneous. For such a case assumes a mere error in decision and not a contrariety to natural justice. The scope of the term has, however, as a matter of general practice, been restricted to narrower limits, being used in reference rather to the conduct or mode of procedure of the foreign Court than to the merits of the particular case.(1) Thus a decision passed without reasonable notice to the persons concerned is contrary to natural justice.(2) This view is adopted by the amendment, that it is the proceedings leading to the judgment which are to be looked at.

4. The judgment must not have been obtained by fraud. All judgments, whether domestic or foreign, are void if obtained by fraud or collusion.(3) In the case of domestic judgments it has sometimes been held that the fraud for which they may be set aside must be extrinsic to the matter tried in the cause and not merely that consisting in false evidence or forged documents submitted to the Court.(4) The rule has been held to apply to foreign judgments also.(5) As regards these judgments, however, the weight of opinion appears to be in favour of the contrary view.(6)

5. It must not sustain a claim founded on a breach of any law in force in British India. If so, the judgment will not be enforced, even though the defect be not apparent on the face of the proceedings.(7) This clause refuses recognition to every foreign judgment which recognizes a legal relation condemned in this country. But it has been held that a domestic judgment is res judicata even when its effect is to sanction what is illegal in the sense of being prohibited by Statute.(8)

Foreign judgments in rem stand on a footing somewhat different from that of domestic judgments in rem as well as from that of foreign judgments in personam. Their recognition and enforcement is still void of express legislative sanction, as while they are beyond the rule of res judicata enunciated in these sections, there is nothing in sect. 41 of the Evidence Act to directly indicate that its provisions relating to judgments in rem are to be construed so as to include foreign judgments. But it is apprehended that in analogy with the practice of the English Courts, such judgments given in the exercise of probate, matrimonial, admiralty, or insolvency jurisdiction will, speaking generally, receive in India the same recognition as is afforded to domestic judgments of the same character.(9) While as in the case of other judgments they are no less binding because erroneous, foreign judgments in rem are generally open to the same objections as those in personam, such as want of jurisdiction, natural justice, or fraud.(1)

While the rules applicable to the class of cases where the defendant sets up a foreign judgment by way of defence are contained in sect. 13; yet apart from the amendment of that section, introduced by sect. 5 of Act VII. of 1888, no statutory provision existed with reference to suits brought to enforce foreign judgments. That amendment, however, recognized the previously existing right to bring a suit on a foreign judgment, and in fact such judgments have been frequently enforced by suit in this country, being considered to impose a duty or obligation which the Courts are bound to give effect to.(2) In respect of the latter class of suits, the general rules are that the judgment must be an adjudication upon the actual merits,(3) final and conclusive,(4) and may be impeached upon the ground that the Court was without jurisdiction to try the case; (5) or that the defendant had not been summoned, and had had no opportunity of making a defence,(6) or on the ground of fraud (7) in the judgment.(1) It may, in fact, be generally said that whatever objections are declared by the Legislature to be admissible against a foreign judgment produced by a defendant in bar to an action are equally admissible against a foreign judgment produced by a plaintiff either to found or support an action.(2) There is, however, a distinction between a case in which a defendant puts forward a foreign judgment as a bar to a suit under sect. 11, and a case in which a plaintiff seeks to enforce a foreign judgment. In the former it may fairly be supposed that the parties submitted to the jurisdiction of the foreign Court.(3) Jurisdiction being properly territorial and attaching, with certain restrictions, upon every person permanently or temporarily resident within the territory, does not follow a foreigner, after his withdrawal thence, living in another State. As to land within the territory, jurisdiction always exists, and may exist, over moveables within it; and exists in questions of status, or succession, governed by domicile. But no territorial legislation can give jurisdiction, which a Court of a foreign State ought to recognize, over an absent foreigner owning no allegiance to the State so legislating. In a personal action, to which none of the above cases of jurisdiction apply, a decree pronounced by a Court of a foreign State in absentem, the latter not having submitted himself to its authority, is by international law a nullity. Not to the Courts of the State in which the cause of action has arisen, nor in cases of contract to those of the locus solutionis, should resort be had by the plaintiff, but to the Courts of the State in which the defendant resides, the Courts of the latter State having jurisdiction in all personal actions.(4) Though, as a general rule, a Court can exercise jurisdiction over a foreigner only if he is resident within the limits of its territorial jurisdiction, and though natives of British India are foreigners, yet they own allegiance to the common Sovereign of England and British India, and are subject to the supreme legislative authority in the British Empire. If, therefore, the supreme Legislature in the British Empire authorizes an English Court in any class of cases to exercise jurisdiction over a non-resident foreigner by reason of the cause of action arising within its jurisdiction, and the foreigner is a native of British India, he cannot treat the judgment passed as a nullity, merely because he did not reside within the jurisdiction of the Court which passed it. Order XI. r. 1 (e), under the English Judicature Act, constitutes a Legislative Act of the sovereign power regulating the jurisdiction in the case of a British subject resident in British India and outside the ordinary territorial jurisdiction of the English Courts, and gives the latter jurisdiction over such British subjects, assuming that the particular case falls within the order. But it is open to a defendant to show that this is not so, and that the English Court had in fact no jurisdiction.(1) It is not sufficient ground for impugning the judgment of a foreign Court, which ordinarily proceeds in accordance with the recognized principles of judicial investigation, to show that in the particular instance its procedure may have been irregular. It may be assumed that the procedure was regular, but if there was irregularity, it would not be sufficient ground for refusing respect to the judgment.(2)

On the other hand, as has been already observed, the general rule is that a Court which entertains a suit on a foreign judgment cannot institute an inquiry into the merits of the original action or the propriety of the decision.(3) This rule, however, was in the last Code abrogated with reference to the judgments of certain foreign Courts in Asia and Africa by the enactment in sect. 5 of Act VII. of 1888, amending sect. 13 of the Code, and which enactment was passed with reference to the arguments urged by the Bombay High Court (4) for distinguishing the judgments of the Courts of native States from those of other foreign Courts. So where a suit was brought in a Court in British India upon the basis of a decree of the Council of Regency of the State of Rampur, it was held that the Court was empowered by sect. 14 (corresponding with sect. 13) of the Code of Civil Procedure, as amended by Act VII. of 1888, to consider the merits of the case in which the decree of the Council of Regency had been passed.(5) It was held in effect by the Madras High Court that this amendment did not alter the general rule already mentioned, except by vesting in the Court a judicial discretion to inquire into the merits of any case in which it appeared that no confidence was to be reposed in the judgment of a foreign Court, being one of those which are mentioned in the amended section. A party to an action on such a judgment had not a right to have the case reheard. All that the section said was that the Judge was not to be precluded from inquiry into the merits.(6) The last paragraph of the corresponding section in the last Code has been now omitted, and no distinction now exists between the judgments of Asiatic and African Courts and other foreign Courts. Where a decree is obtained upon a foreign judgment it is to be executed according to the provisions of the Code.(1) The judgment of a foreign Court obtained on a decree of a Court in British India is no bar to the execution of the original decree.(2) Sect. 112 provides for the execution of decrees of Courts established by the Government of India in Native States, and sect. 113 allows of the execution in particular instances, upon the permission of the Governor in Council, of the decrees of other Native Courts as if they had been made by the Courts in British India.

It is a well-recognized principle that crimes, including in that term all breaches of public law punishable by pecuniary mulct or otherwise, at the instance of State Government, or of some one representing the public, are local in this sense, that they are only cognizable and punishable in the country where they were committed. Accordingly, no proceeding, even in the shape of a civil suit, which has for its object the enforcement by the State, whether directly or indirectly, of punishment imposed for such breaches by the lex fori, ought to be admitted in the Courts of any other country.(3)

Interlocutory orders and orders in execution proceedings.—Sect. 11 is not exhaustive of the effects of the principle of res judicata.(4) These orders, if not appealed from, are binding upon the parties in all subsequent proceedings in the same suit. Though sect. 11 of the Code does not in terms apply to these orders, yet the principle which underlies it is equally applicable to them as to regular suits. The Privy Council, speaking of such an order, held that, "It was as binding between the parties and those claiming under them as an interlocutory judgment in a suit is binding upon the parties in every proceeding in that suit, or as a final judgment in a suit is binding upon them in carrying the judgment into execution. The binding force of such a judgment depends, not upon sect. 13 of Act X. of 1877, but upon general principles of law. If it were not binding there would be no end to litigation." (5) The principle of res judicata applies to prevent parties raising a second time in the same suit, or in the same execution proceedings, an issue which, in that suit or on the execution proceedings in that suit, had been previously determined.(6) Orders in execution proceedings, if not appealed from, are binding upon the parties to the suit in all subsequent proceedings in that suit, on principles analogous to those of res judicata strictly so called. It is, therefore, necessary to constitute a bar that there should be a hearing and final decision. Where an application for execution is allowed to be withdrawn, the matters in dispute are not heard and decided. There is, therefore, no res judicata.(1) Though a decree does not in terms give a certain relief, yet if it is construed in orders passed upon it as having given that relief, it is not competent to the Court on a subsequent application to treat those orders as erroneous and put another construction on the decree.(2) Sect. 47 differs from sect. 11 in this respect, that the latter section bars not only the trial of a suit or issue, where the suit or issue had been previously heard and determined, but also the trial of an issue which should have been raised in a previous suit by either party. When an issue arising out of the execution of a decree has not been raised and determined under sect. 47, there is nothing in that section to prevent a defendant, in a separate suit subsequently brought, from raising that issue in that suit.(3) For a case where a previous application for execution was refused and judgment-debtor's objection as to limitation disallowed, and as to the effect of such an order in a subsequent application for execution, see below.(4) A judgment-debtor cannot question the right of a decree-holder to apply for execution when execution has been on previous occasions applied for by the latter, and granted by the executing Court.(5) In the under-mentioned case.(6) it was held that though the analogy furnished by sect. 11 could not be altogether left out of sight in the application there dealt with, yet the Court ought to facilitate inquiries which are necessary for the purpose of carrying out decrees passed by it, and to accept with readiness any information which shows that the litigants have disregarded any part of the Court's decree. It would be wrong to dismiss an application made with the above purpose, simply because the applicant may have made the same endeavour without success in another proceeding.

A witness in a proceeding under sect. 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code had asked for his costs in the Magistrate's Court but had been refused and was referred to a civil suit. On his bringing such suit it was held that there was no adjudication, no issues, no contesting parties, and that therefore the principle of res judicata did not apply.(7)

In a suit for probate, the caveators assailed the whole of the will on the ground of undue influence, but the probate Court granted probate disallowing the objection. Held, that in a subsequent suit it was not competent for the caveators to show that any particular clause in the will had been inserted through undue influence.(1)

PLACE OF SUING.

15. Every suit shall be instituted in the Court of the lowest grade competent to try it.

Court in which suits to be instituted.

"Shall be instituted."—There is no provision either in the various Civil Court Acts or in the Code prescribing a minimum jurisdiction as there is prescribing a maximum jurisdiction. A superior Court is by this section forbidden from trying a suit cognizable by an inferior Court, not on account of any inherent incompetency to try it, but on grounds of public convenience and economy. It has been thought that this section prescribed a minimum limit of jurisdiction, and that, for instance, a Subordinate Judge would have no jurisdiction to try a suit which, owing to its value, was triable by a Munsif. But it has been held that this section refers to procedure only, and regulates the practice of the Courts, but does not deprive any Court of jurisdiction which it may otherwise possess.(2) The section is merely directory, and does not oust the jurisdiction of a Subordinate or District Judge; (3) and the institution of a suit cognizable by a lower Court in a Court of higher jurisdiction is merely an irregularity which does not affect the jurisdiction of the Court (4) or the merits of the case (5) and such as was covered by sect. 578 of the former Code.(6)

Court.—The term "Court of the lowest grade" refers only to Courts to which the Civil Procedure Code is applicable.(1) It has been therefore held in Madras that Small Cause Courts had concurrent jurisdiction with Courts of Village Munsifs to hear suits which are cognizable by the latter.(2)

"Lowest grade."—Throughout the country there are Courts of different grades having jurisdiction in suits of different amounts in certain prescribed local areas. The pecuniary jurisdiction must be determined with reference to the various Acts constituting the Courts and the question of the valuation of particular suits, in order to ascertain within the jurisdiction of which Court they fall, by reference to the Court Fees and Valuation Act, and the cases decided thereunder, to which reference has been made in the notes to sect. 9, ante, "Pecuniary Jurisdiction." Sect. 144 of the Bengal Tenancy Act was held to be controlled by sects. 15 and 17 of the former Civil Procedure Code. A suit for rent is therefore to be instituted, subject to pecuniary limitations, in the Court of the lowest grade competent to try it.(3) Where there were two plaintiffs, one of whom should have sued, if sole plaintiff, in the Subordinate Judge's Court as the Court of lowest grade, and the other could, by reason of the provisions of Act XX. of 1863, only sue in the District Court, it was held that as it was competent for the plaintiffs to join, this section did not apply so as to prevent the first plaintiff from joining with the second in instituting the suit in the District Court.(4)

"Competent to try."—Competency here means jurisdiction. The competency of a Court depends upon the nature or subject-matter of a suit, and upon the local and pecuniary extent of the Court's jurisdiction. As regards the first, certain Courts are Courts of special jurisdiction, inasmuch as some classes of cases involve disputes with which superior or specially experienced tribunals are particularly familiar, and which can more satisfactorily be disposed of by them: such as Revenue, Admiralty, Probate, Divorce, Patent, Insolvency Courts, and the like. Further, cases of importance affecting considerable interests or involving questions of intricacy are left to be determined by the higher grade or superior Courts.(5) So suits for damages for the infringement of the exclusive privilege to an invention or of a copyright in a design under the Inventions and Designs Act,(6) or, for damages for the infringement of the copyright in books,(7) have been specially made cognizable only by District Courts. So suits under sect. 92, post, can be instituted only in a High Court or District Court. Miscellaneous proceedings unconnected with suits are generally triable outside the Presidency towns by District Courts, though sometimes Subordinate Courts are empowered to dispose of them on a reference by the District Court.(1) And in Bombay the District Judge can alone take cognizance of suits in which the Government or any officer of Government in his official capacity is a party.(2) So in Madras, a suit by a zemindar for the dismissal of a zemindari karnam cannot be entertained by a District Munsif, such suit being cognizable only by a Subordinate or, if none, a District Judge.(3) On the other hand, cases of easy settlement and minor importance are relegated to petty tribunals or to special Courts, such as Small Cause Courts or Village Munsifs' Courts. See generally as to jurisdiction over the subject-matter and persons, the notes to sect. 9, ante, and the same also as to locality of jurisdiction, which is more particularly dealt with in the next four sections and the notes thereto. The present section has reference mainly to the pecuniary jurisdiction of Courts, the limitations of which, in regard to different grades of civil Courts, vary in the several provinces of British India. See notes to sect. 9, ante.

Explanation.—In this section "property" means property situate in British India.

"Pecuniary or other limitations."—See as to these, notes to sects. 9 and 15, ante.

Scope of section.—This section deals with local or territorial jurisdiction, which in the case of real actions depends on the situation of the property in litigation, and sect. 20 deals with personal actions which depend on the place of accrual of the cause of action, or the residence of the defendant. The general rule of local jurisdiction, of which this section is an embodiment, is that immoveable property is exclusively subject to the laws and jurisdiction of the Courts of the country in which it is situate. It follows from this that no other laws or Courts can affect it. As expressly stated in the Explanation, the Courts of this country have, subject to the proviso, no jurisdiction in respect of immoveable property situate outside British India.(1) But all property which has a foreign origin is not always outside the jurisdiction of Courts of this country.(2) Where, however, a suit was brought in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Mirzapur for redemption of lands lying within that district, but included in the same mortgage with other lands lying within the family domains of the Maharajah of Benares, it was held that as the Court had jurisdiction to entertain the suit in respect of the immoveable property in Mirzapur, that jurisdiction could not be ousted because in the course of the trial of the suit it became necessary incidentally to decide, for the purposes of the suit, questions relating to mortgaged property held by the defendants outside the jurisdiction, in order to determine whether the plaintiff had a right to recover the mortgaged property situated in Mirzapur.(3)

This section does not apply to the original civil jurisdiction of the Presidency High Courts, which are governed by clause 12 of the Letters Patent, which empowers them to try suits for land or other immoveable property if such land or property shall be situated either wholly or, in case the leave (4) of the Court shall have been first obtained, in part, within the Suits deemed to be for immoveable property.- In the case of the High Courts there has been considerable conflict of opinion as to the essentials of jurisdiction, for which provision has been made by the Charters ; to avoid which in regard to the practice of the Mofussil Courts the section contains detailed provisions as to local jurisdiction. The High Courts have ordinarily no jurisdiction to try suits relating to immoveable property, where such property is wholly situate without the local limits of their original jurisdiction,(5) and it would appear to be doubtful whether the Equitable jurisdiction of the High Courts in India is of the same extent as that which has been claimed by the Court of Chancery, namely, to take cognizance of any equity between persons residing within the jurisdiction respecting lands outside it.(6) Moreover, the present tendency, even in the case of English Courts, is to abstain from interfering in personam where the matter concerns land outside their jurisdiction.(7) It is generally agreed that a suit for partition of immoveable property is a suit for immoveable property.(8) So also is any suit seeking delivery to the plaintiff of land or other immoveable property. The Bombay High Court formerly appeared to take a view which would restrict the words "suits for land or other immoveable property" to suits of the last-mentioned character.(9) The other High Courts have held that that expression includes suits other than those for the possession of land ; in fact, every suit in which a decree is asked for operating directly on the land, such as to enforce a security upon it for foreclosure or redemption. Thus the decisions were conflicting upon the point whether such Courts are empowered to entertain suits for foreclosure or sale, or redemption of property beyond their local jurisdiction,(10) or for specific performance of contracts relating to land similarly situated.(1) In more recent cases the Bombay High Court has also taken the broader view.(2) In the Madras High Court, it was held that a "suit for land" includes any suit in which a decree is asked for operating directly upon the land,(3) and therefore includes any suit brought to enforce a security upon land, such as a suit for the sale of land equitably mortgaged by deposit of title deeds: Moore, J., stating that the present section of the Code was simply an amplification with details of the old section of the Act of 1859, on which clause 12 of the Letters Patent was, it appears, based, observed that he was prepared to go further, and to hold that the phrase "suit for land or other immoveable property," as used in the Letters Patent, includes all suits mentioned in clauses (a) to (f) of this section. If the property is situate outside the jurisdiction, the High Court cannot take cognizance of it, even if moveable property within the jurisdiction is also claimed in it; as clause 12 does not qualify the expression "in suits for land," etc., with the word only, and the words "all other cases" are not to be understood as including cases of suits for immoveable plus moveable property, but those in which immoveable property is not involved.(4) It is, however, generally admitted that every suit having any reference to immoveable property is not a suit for immoveable property.(5) It has been held that a suit to recover title deeds of certain land outside the local limits, even though it may involve a question of title to that land, is not a suit to obtain possession of, or deal in any way with, land and is therefore cognizable by the High Court; (1) but this has been disputed.(2) So also where in a suit by a landlord for rent no relief is claimed in respect of the land, but it becomes necessary to determine what the nature of the tenancy was, that question does not make the suit one "for land." (3) The High Court has also taken cognizance of an application to file an award which provided for the dissolution of a partnership in lands outside the local limits, and also that the defendant's share in the property should stand charged with the payment of a certain fund to be due by him to the plaintiff, and that the defendant should execute a mortgage of his share to the plaintiff as security for such payment, and that the tea-garden at Darjiling should be sold in Calcutta.(4)

The general Equitable jurisdiction of the High Court, on the original side, which it has inherited from the supreme Court, which in its turn administered the Chancery Rules, must also be considered (vide post). So the Courts of Equity will exercise their powers in personam in the case of trustees and others resident within their jurisdiction, to oblige such persons to perform trusts, to carry out contracts, and to obey the rules of Equity even where the subject-matter of the trust or contract or equity may be land situate out of their jurisdiction.(5) Again, there is the Equitable jurisdiction by grant of an injunction or appointment of a receiver. Thus a suit for damages to certain immoveable property by a nuisance caused on it, and for an injunction to restrain the nuisance, has been held to be a suit not for immoveable property, but exclusively in personam.(6) Similarly, a suit by some of the trustees of an endowment of certain lands against their co-trustees in possession, for a declaration of plaintiff's title to be shebaits jointly with the defendants, for the settlement of a scheme for the performance of the worship, for the appointment of a receiver, for an injunction to restrain the defendants from interfering with the property, and for an account, is not a suit for those lands.(7)

An ordinary suit for administration, which raises no question of title to the property in suit, is not a suit for land.(1) But where a plaintiff sued for a declaration that he was entitled to immediate and absolute possession of properties both moveable and immoveable, the latter being wholly situated outside the jurisdiction, for the construction of a will, for an account by the executrix, for administration and other relief, it was held that the suit was one for land and that the High Court had no jurisdiction to entertain it.(2)

Passing to the present section, which governs the Provincial Courts, having regard to its full and precise language, there can hardly be any difference as to the character of the suits to which the principle of local jurisdiction must be held to apply. The insertion of the words "with or without rent or profits" is intended to remove any difficulty there may be where the defendant does not reside within the local jurisdiction of the Court within the jurisdiction of which the property is situate. The only clause as to which there is any room for dispute as to its application is clause (d), the words of which are very comprehensive, and wide enough to include various classes of suits which might not be held to be for immoveable property under the Letters Patent.(3)

The following have been held to be suits of the nature referred to: a suit to have certain lands declared liable for the satisfaction of an instalment bond; (4) to enforce a right of hypothecation by sale; (5) by vendor to enforce specific performance.(6) A bond hypothecating the structure of a house, exclusive of the land beneath, was held to create an interest in immoveable property.(7) A suit is for such an interest which is brought to enforce payment of principal and interest both as a simple contract liability and as a debt secured by a collateral mortgage of immoveable property,(8) or for a declaration of title to a share in vaishusans (allowances) charged on the revenues of villages.(9) A right to balute was held to be an interest in immoveable property within the meaning of the Provincial Small Cause Court Act, 1865.(10) A right to hold land free from Government assessment,(11) or to have a watercourse opened in one's land, was held to be an interest in land; (12)

as also a suit for the recovery of purchase-money under contract for the sale of land.(1) A suit for grazing dues by the lessee of the grass of certain Government land.(2) and a suit for the recovery of tolls by the lessee of a Government ferry,(3) involve an interest in immoveable property, and have on that ground been held to be not cognizable by a Provincial Court of Small Causes. And hypothecation of immoveable property creates an interest in that property within the meaning of that Act.(4) Clause (c) has now been amended to include both mortgages and charges and suits for sale as well as those for foreclosure or redemption.

A suit to enforce a foreign judgment,(5) a suit upon an agreement to grant a lease,(6) and a suit to follow the purchase-money of land taken up under the Land Acquisition Act, over which the plaintiff had a mortgage lien,(7) and a suit for a declaration that the plaintiffs were the persons in reality beneficially interested in a decree for sale on a mortgage although the decree did not run in their names,(8) are not suits of the nature mentioned in clause (d).

Clause (e) contemplates an essentially different class of suits, viz. suits for money as distinct from those for property. They have been treated as local, as the wrong forming their basis must usually take place where the property is situate, and they can also be most conveniently inquired into there.(9) A suit for compensation for wrong to immoveable property is, unless within the proviso, within the intention of the section, and a claim for damage to land cannot be said to be a claim which can be entirely obtained through the personal obedience of the defendant, even though it may be joined with a claim for an injunction.(10)

As regards clause (f), it has been already pointed out (11) that moveable property is generally deemed to follow the person, and the reasons why an exception is made where the property is under distraint or attachment and therefore incapable of a change of position.

It is to be observed, generally, that suits for money or moveable property may be treated as local under special legislation. Thus while, as a general rule, suits for rent are not suits for immoveable property,(12) and do not therefore fall within this section, sects. 144 and 193 of the Bengal Tenancy Act make special provisions as regards suits between landlord and tenant.(13)

Proviso.—This proviso relates to the well-known Equitable jurisdiction in personam. According to the maxim "Equity acts in personam," that is, it regards its decrees as commands or directions addressed to the defendant personally rather than as decisions directly affecting the subject-matter of dispute. Though the Court cannot, in the case of lands situate without the jurisdiction, give relief in rem, still it can enforce its judgment, which is in personam by process in personam, as by attachments of the person, lands, and goods of the defendant within the jurisdiction until the defendant complies with the order of the Court. Thus in accordance with the principle laid down in the leading case on the subject, Penn v. Lord Baltimore,(1) the Court of Chancery has entertained actions for account and discovery of rents and profits; for specific performance and injunction; for foreclosure of mortgages, and for the execution of conveyances and the like regarding lands situate abroad, and whether within the King's Dominions or not, though if the very title itself to the lands is in question, the Court will not assume jurisdiction.(2)

The Courts have thus compelled the performance of contracts and trusts, which were not either locally or ratione domicilii within their jurisdiction.(3) But in this country the power to make orders in personam, though the subject-matter of the suit is without the jurisdiction, which jurisdiction exists both n the case of the High Courts and the Provincial Courts, must be considered with reference to the limitations on jurisdiction imposed in the case of the ormer by the Letters Patent, and in the case of the latter by the provisions of this section. In the case of the High Courts, regard must be had to the eal object of the suit and to what are the rights and intentions of the espective parties, and those cases which are founded upon the principle laid lown in Penn v. Baltimore must be distinguished from those which depend not so much upon the jurisdiction generally exercised by Courts of Equity, as upon the question whether the suit is substantially one within the statutory urisdiction conferred upon the Courts.(4) So when a suit which, though in orm one brought for an injunction or relief obtained through personal obedience, s in substance a suit "for land," which land is situate without the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court, the latter has no power to grant the relief prayed.(5) The Equitable jurisdiction of the High Courts is not as extensive as that which has been claimed by the Court of Chancery.(6) Though the Courts here are governed by the same principles as those which are acted upon by Courts of Equity in England, this is only so far as such principles are not at variance with express legislative enactment.(7)

made in respect of the property in suit rather than the actual situation of the latter. If the suit is not, by reason of its substantial character and the provisions of the Charters, within the cognizance of the Court, the latter is unable to grant relief. But where the relief sought is purely in personam and not in rem the Courts are empowered to make a decree which shall be of the same character.(1)

The same rule applies in the case of Courts other than the Presidency High Courts; but in this case the provisions of this section must be considered. Under it, such Courts may exercise a jurisdiction in personam, but the jurisdiction seems to be of a more limited extent. Not only are they expressly deprived of power to entertain suits for foreclosure, sale or redemption, but the limitations imposed by clause (d) are in terms extensive, and the proviso determining their powers to act in personam limits the exercise of such powers to cases where the property is held by or on behalf of the defendant (2) resident within the jurisdiction,(3) when the relief sought can be entirely obtained through his personal obedience, and where the property is situated in British India.(4)

"Actually and voluntarily resides."—As to the meaning of these words, see the notes to sect. 20.

Provided that, in respect of the value of the subject-matter of the suit, the entire claim is cognizable by such Court.

Scope of section.—This section gives jurisdiction to a Court to entertain a suit in respect of properties partly situate within its territorial limits and partly out of it, where the same relief is sought in respect of the whole of the properties.(5) The section corresponds to sects. 11 and 12 of the Code of 1859; as also to sect. 19 of the last Code, with the exception that the last paragraph of that section relating to property situated in different districts, and the words "within the limits of a single district but" before "within the jurisdiction" in the first clause of the present section, have been omitted. The words "to obtain relief respecting, or compensation for wrong to, immoveable property" should not, it is submitted, be construed in any restricted sense, but embrace all suits relating to immoveable property mentioned in sect. 16.(1) The provisions of this section are intended for the benefit of litigants and to avoid multiplicity of suits. It says nothing as to one or more causes of action. And it applies to a suit in which the relief claimed is in respect of more than one cause of action, unity of cause of action in respect of which relief is claimed being immaterial.(2) Where there is but one cause of action in respect of different properties situate in different jurisdictions a plaintiff should avail himself of the provisions of this section, and if he does not a second suit will not lie.(3) Where jurisdiction has once properly vested in a Court it will not be taken away by reason of a bonâ fide compromise withdrawing the claim in respect of property within the jurisdiction.(4) The section, however, while it gives opportunities to the litigant, does not extend the powers of the Court, except in so far as upon the initiative of the former it obtains jurisdiction. Neither under this section, nor otherwise, has the High Court in its appellate jurisdiction power to confer jurisdiction on a Court in District A to deal with a suit commenced and prosecuted in District B relating to lands in B. Nor does the Code empower the High Court, without consent of parties, to change two suits, one of which it has itself dismissed, into one suit of a totally different description from either of them.(5)

A Scheduled District not being a district within the meaning of this section, a Court at Moradabad was held not to have jurisdiction over a suit relating to immoveable property, of which a large portion was in Tarai District, so far as that portion was concerned.(6)

The section does not apply to the Presidency High Courts, and therefore when part of the immoveable property is without the jurisdiction, leave must be obtained prior to the institution of the suit.(1) The restrictive words of clause 12 of the Letters Patent apply to the case of a plaintiff; there is no similar restraining provision applicable to a case where the person seeking the exercise of the Court's jurisdiction is the defendant.(2)

Suit: Execution.—Applications for execution are proceedings in suits,(3) being but a continuation of the proceedings in the suit in which the decree was passed.(4) But they are not a suit, and the section deals with the institution of a suit. Jurisdiction over execution proceedings depended, it was held, on the provisions of sect. 223 of the last Code, and the present provisions had reference to original suits only. A decree-holder could not, it was held, therefore, take execution proceedings relating to or against immoveable property at his option under this section simply on the ground that a portion of the property was situate within the local limits of its jurisdiction.(5) Primâ facie, however, every Court having jurisdiction to try a suit has jurisdiction to execute its own decree in that suit.(6) If a Court has jurisdiction under this section to entertain a suit and to make a decree for sale, it follows that it has jurisdiction to sell all and every parcel of property comprised in the decree, although one or other of the parcels may be beyond the local limits of its jurisdiction.(7) And it has been recently held that while the provisions of sects. 38 and 39 indicate that no Court can execute a decree in which the subject-matter of the suit or of the application for execution is property wholly situated outside the local limits of its jurisdiction, yet there are several exceptions to this rule, as in cases of decrees for sale of mortgaged property or in cases of

No authority was cited, however, in support of this statement, and the observation was not necessary for the decision, which is dealt with post, and which was to the effect that a Court should proceed with the execution of its decree as against an entire revenue paying estate, even though a part of it be situate outside the jurisdiction; it being added that the case would be different if the property consisted of different taluks or estates, the whole of any one or more of which was situate in the other districts. attachment of salaries of public officers and of sale of entire estates situated within the local limits of the jurisdiction of more than one Court under O. XXI. r. 3.(1) It was held that sect. 223, clause (c) of the former Code was not mandatory, but gave a discretion to the Court.(2) So a Court which had jurisdiction to pass a decree for the sale of property comprised in a mortgage had also power to carry out its decree by selling the property, even though a portion of the property was situated outside the local limits of its jurisdiction.(3) See now notes to sect. 38, post.

Place of institution of suit where local limits of jurisdiction of Courts are uncertain.

(1) Where it is alleged to be uncertain within the local limits of the jurisdiction of which of two or more Courts any immoveable property is situate, any one of those Courts may, if satisfied that there is ground for the alleged uncertainty, record a statement to that effect and thereupon proceed to entertain and dispose of any suit relating to that property, and its decree in the suit shall have the same effect as if the property were situate within the local limits of its jurisdiction:

Provided that the suit is one with respect to which the Court is competent as regards the nature and value of the suit to exercise jurisdiction.

(2) Where a statement has not been recorded under sub-section (1), and an objection is taken before an appellate or revisional Court that a decree or order in a suit relating to such property was made by a Court not having jurisdiction where the property is situate, the appellate or revisional Court shall not allow the objection unless in its opinion there was, at the time of the institution of the suit, no reasonable ground for uncertainty as to the Court having jurisdiction with respect thereto, and there has been a consequent failure of justice.

diction which frequently arises where the boundaries of estates or holdings are destroyed or altered by fluvial action.(1) The fact that no notification was known as laying down the boundaries of the district in which it was contended that a suit should have been brought was held to create a reasonable uncertainty in the matter.(2) In the same suit it was held that a suit for rent of a fishery was a suit for immoveable property within the meaning of this section.(3) The italicized words have been added in order still further to restrict the taking of technical objections as to jurisdiction.

Suits for compensation.—This section creates a special jurisdiction in the case of actionable wrongs, but in the cases of tort, to which it does not apply, resort may be had to the next section, which is of general application in all cases.(4) Thus the section appears only to contemplate Courts in British India, and therefore to be restricted to cases in which both the wrong is done and the defendant resides, etc., in British India.(5) Inasmuch also as it refers to suits for compensation only, it would appear to exclude suits for an injunction against disturbance of rights, such as rights of patent, trade-mark, etc., which will fall within the general words of sect. 20. Whether the cause of action in such suits be the right disturbed or the disturbance caused to it, or both, has not been judicially settled.(6) In cases, however, falling within this section, the Court where the wrong is done will have jurisdiction quite apart from all considerations of the place where the right violated by the wrong came into existence or existed.

"Wrong done."—The word "wrong" in this section means an actionable wrong. It is essential to an action on tort that the act complained of should be legally wrongful, that is prejudicially affecting the complainant in some legal right, such as rights of reputation, bodily safety, freedom and property.(1) The words "wrong done" are, however, not altogether free from difficulty; a wrong consists of an act or omission, and both are often complex notions involving a series of acts or omissions, and sometimes extending over a lengthened period, and comprising their voluntary and involuntary consequences, as to which, as explained in Mr. Hukm Chand's work on Consent,(2) no sharp line can be drawn between those which may and which may not be considered a part of the act itself. Causing a person to be falsely charged with a criminal offence is an actionable wrong, but where the only act done within the jurisdiction pursuant to a conspiracy formed in a native State was the giving of false evidence, which is not in itself an actionable wrong, it was held that a suit for the injury caused in consequence of giving false evidence could not be instituted in the High Court, as no cause of action arose within its jurisdiction.(3)

(b) A resides at Simla, B at Calcutta, and C at Delhi. A, B and C being together at Benares, B and C make a joint promissory note payable on demand, and deliver it to A. A may sue B and C at Benares, where the cause of action arose. He may also sue them at Calcutta, where B resides, or at Delhi, where C resides; but in each of these cases, if the non-resident defendant objects, the suit cannot proceed without the leave of the Court.

"Subject to the limitations aforesaid."—These limitations are those referred to in sect. 16 as "pecuniary or other limitations prescribed by any law," and, by implication, sect. 15.(1) See Notes to that section. The jurisdiction is subject to special Acts, such as the Provincial Small Cause Court Act, but inasmuch as a plaintiff may select the forum in which to bring his suit, if a suit may be brought at either A or B, and at A there is no Small Cause Court having jurisdiction, though there is one at B, the jurisdiction of the District Munsif's Court at A in which the suit is brought is not ousted by the fact that there was in existence at the date of suit a Small Cause Court at B. To hold otherwise would be to compel the plaintiff to sue at B, and thus to deprive him of his choice of forum. If, however, there had been a Small Cause Court at A, the suit would, if the plaintiff selected A as his forum, have to be instituted in the Small Cause Court.(2)

"Every suit."—The words in the last Code were "all other suits," which was held to mean all suits other than those mentioned in sect. 16.(3)

"Shall be instituted."—This section lays down the rule as to the forum of personal actions, which may be either that of the place of accrual of the cause of action, or the place of the defendant. As already observed, where a suit may be filed in more than one of several Courts it is a general principle of law that the plaintiff may select the forum in which to bring the suit.(4) The section mentions several independent grounds of jurisdiction, and, where several of such grounds exist giving jurisdiction to different Courts, the plaintiff may select which of these Courts he chooses. Thus, the cause of action may arise in the case of suits arising out of contracts in the three different places mentioned in the third Explanation to this section under the last Code, and the defendants may reside in a fresh place, and a plaintiff may choose either of such places as the forum of his suit.(5) Vide post.

Forum of the defendant.—Where the cause of action wholly arises in the jurisdiction of a Court other than that in which the suit is brought, the plaintiff must show (the onus being upon him (1)) such a residence, carrying on business, or working for gain of the defendant,(2) which is within the terms of this section, or in the case of the Presidency High Courts (to which this section does not apply), within the terms of clause 12 of the Letters Patent. In either case there is no question that the term "defendant" includes a foreigner when that foreigner dwells or resides or personally works for gain within the jurisdiction.(3) It is well settled also that the carrying on of business need not be personal, but may be by means of an agent.(4) There is, however, a conflict upon the point whether the Court has jurisdiction in the case of a foreigner who is non-resident and carries on business through an agent.(5)

As regards several defendants, the section makes express provision. Either all the defendants must reside, etc., or there must be leave by the Court or absence of objection by the defendants. If the defendants who do not reside, etc., within the local jurisdiction did not apply under sect. 21 of the last Code, they were held to have acquiesced, the intention of the Legislature being that objection should be raised on the first opportunity.(6) Under the last Code it was held that the acquiescence must be by the defendant who resides, etc., outside the jurisdiction. Where, therefore, the cause of action in a suit against three defendants was held to have arisen outside the jurisdiction, and one of such defendants resided outside the jurisdiction but did not acquiesce in the suit, it was held that if there were any acquiescence on the part of other defendants residing within the jurisdiction, it did not give the Court jurisdiction to try the suit.(7)

The rule contained in clause (b) is based on the now generally recognized principle of the connection of the cause of action; (1) but there is nothing corresponding to it in the Letters Patent. It was held under the last Code (2) that the proviso following clause (c) in that Code applied only to that clause and not to clauses (a) and (b). The reconstruction of the section, as also the addition of the words "in such case," makes this clear.

In the case of clause 12 of the Letters Patent it has been held that the word "defendant" in that clause means all the defendants, if there are several defendants to a suit. It is not sufficient that one of the defendants should dwell or carry on business within the jurisdiction.(3)

"Actually."—The residence is required to be actual, both to exclude what is merely colourable and collusive, and therefore no residence at all; and to emphasize what has been a growing tendency, viz. to substitute for mere domicile or constructive residence the actual state of affairs at the institution of the suit. This does not mean that the defendant must be personally present within the jurisdiction at the date of the suit. Although a defendant may be temporarily absent from his dwelling, yet if he retains it and intends to return to it, he will be held to dwell there.(4) Actual residence does not, of course, require a continual actual presence every day and every hour in the place of residence, or exclude temporary absence from the locality in which it lies (5) What is required is that the place should be the actual residence of the defendant when the suit is instituted. So a person who had dwelt and carried on business in Bombay for twenty years and had only occasionally visited Ahmadabad, where was the family home, was held to be actually residing in Bombay.(6) And where a person is in service at any place, whether of the Government (7) or of a private person,(8) he has been held not to dwell at another place where he has a family house in which his father lived, and which he occasionally visited; even though the service be of a domestic character.(9) The decision in the last-cited case proceeded on the ground that the word "dwell" must be used in the sense of actual residence, and the place where a servant is in service of a domestic character cannot be looked upon as a lodging for a temporary purpose only, but as a dwelling-place, although he may have the intention of returning at some future time to another dwelling where his family resides.

"Voluntarily."—Under the Code of 1859 a person was held to reside for the purpose of jurisdiction even where he was lawfully confined.(1) It is, however, a general principle that a person's compulsory residence at any place is not deemed sufficient to give jurisdiction over him to the Courts of that place; and the word "voluntarily" appears to have been used to give legislative sanction to that view.

"Resides."—The corresponding expression used in the Code of 1859 and in the Small Cause Court Act was "dwell," the word which still exists in clause 12 of the Letters Patent of the Presidency High Courts.(2) The first point to be determined is whether there is any difference between the meaning of the two expressions, and secondly, what the meaning is. In an early case,(3) Levinge, J., said: "I consider that the word 'dwell' has a more extended signification than the word 'reside,' and means a permanent, as opposed to a mere temporary, residence. A traveller putting up at an hotel may be said in one sense to reside there; but a man can only be said to dwell, in the sense in which that term is used as giving jurisdiction, in the place where he ordinarily and permanently resides." It has, however, been said that little or no distinction can be drawn between the two words and the meaning implied in them, and that, if any distinction can be drawn, it would appear that "dwell" has a more extended signification than "reside."(4) In other cases it has been said that the terms are synonymous and express the same thing, the only difference being that they are perhaps in ordinary usage applied to different classes of society; (5) and that "dwell" is of Saxon and "reside" of Latin origin.(6) In a legal sense, neither term has any meaning which can be precisely defined. In the first place, the word need not necessarily have the same meaning in different enactments, nor even in different sections of the same enactment. The terms must be construed according to what may be supposed to have been the intention of the Legislature in using it.(7)

Synonymous meanings are given also in Webster's and Latham's Dictionaries cited ib. at pp. 548, 549. And see Pirgash Paray v. Hachim, 7 W. R. 417 (1867), in which it was pointed out that the term "dwell" is ambiguous and in it was interpreted as meaning actual and usual place of residence. The expressions are elastic: Shri Goswami v. Shri Govardhanlalji, 14 B. at p. 548. The words dwelling or residence are synonymous with domicile or home: Fatima v. Sakina, 1 A. 52 (1875). According to this supposed intention, the terms may receive a larger or more restricted meaning.(1) It is necessary to consider, in determining this intention, what the object of the enactment was. So it has been held that sect. 382 of the former Code (corresponding with O. XXV. r. 1 of this Code) shows the intention of the Legislature to have been that "residence" should be residence under such circumstances as will afford reasonable probability that the plaintiff will be forthcoming when the suit is decided.(2) And it has been held that under O. V. r. 9 the place where a defendant "resides" is the place where he eats, drinks and sleeps, or where his family and servants eat, drink and sleep.(3) Bare residence has been considered sufficient under sect. 648 of the former Code (corresponding with sect. 136 of this Code), so as to render a party liable to arrest, presumably because such an interpretation will best give effect to the intentions of the Legislature.(4) The term non-resident in sect. 37 of the last Code (or O. III. r. 2 of this) should be construed broadly and favourably to the enforcement of legal rights, so as not to prevent a creditor from enforcing his claims against his debtor.(5) The object of the Insolvent Act being to extend its benefit to those who could be said to be bonâ fide residents for the time being within the jurisdiction at the time they filed their petitions, there is nothing to show that the residence contemplated by sect. 5 of that Act (11 & 12 Vict. c. 21) must necessarily be a permanent residence. The term is used to distinguish the position of such persons from that of one who merely comes in and uses his presence within the jurisdiction as the means of obtaining the benefit of the Act, and it also has the effect of excluding persons merely in the position of visitors.(6) As to jurisdiction in the case of infants, see below.(7)

As regards the construction of these terms, as used in reference to jurisdiction, it has been variously said that when they are used to give jurisdiction they must be taken to be used in their strictest sense; (8) that they are to be construed broadly, so as to prevent a debtor from evading the claims of his creditors, the intention of the Legislature being favourable to the enforcement of legal rights; (9) and that they are to be used in their usual and ordinary acceptation, neither strained to amplify the jurisdiction of the Court nor narrowed to minimize it.(10) It is, however, submitted that in consulting the grounds upon which jurisdiction is given on account of residence a guide will be found to the true interpretation of the term, and the grounds upon which such jurisdiction is given are the convenience not of the plaintiff but of the defendant and his witnesses, and the advantage which may accrue to the former by enforcing the judgment of the Court within its own jurisdiction.(1) These connote a residence of a more or less permanent character.

Nextly, even in the case of the same enactment and the same portion of it there can be no fixed rule for all cases. Each case must depend upon its own particular circumstances.(2)

It is necessary, in the first place, that the residence be actual and bonâ fide, and not merely colourable or collusive, for in such case there is no residence at all. Assuming this, it cannot, however, be laid down with precision how long a person must stay in a place, and in what way, so as to be deemed to reside there. A very short period of actual living has been held sufficient in some cases.(3) Firstly may be considered those cases where a man has no permanent residence. Great stress is laid in the cases on the fact as to whether or not the person said to reside within the jurisdiction had at the time any other residence elsewhere.(4) When a man has no permanent residence he must be taken to dwell where he is actually staying.(5) So in such cases a stay of a month was held sufficient in the case of a man who had no other residence;(6) the stay of a ship's captain in port,(7) and even ten days.(8)

The other case is that in which a person has a permanent residence elsewhere. A person may, however, dwell or reside at more places than one.(9) But in order to afford foundation for jurisdiction the residences must be of a permanent character and be visited from time to time.(10) When the defendant has a fixed and permanent residence elsewhere, to give jurisdiction on the ground of residence, something more than a temporary stay within the local limits of the Court is required.(11) So a temporary residence of ten days;(12) a residence for the temporary purpose of attending a trial of a suit in which the party was a defendant; (13) staying in a place with a definite object or fixed purpose for a short and limited period,(1) will not, in the case of a man who has a bonâ fide and permanent abode elsewhere, give jurisdiction. So where an officer attached to a regiment at Vellore went on medical leave to Madras, where he resided in a rented house and finally returned to Vellore, the latter was held to be the place where he dwelt.(2)

In conclusion, it may be said that while neither "dwell" nor "reside" necessarily implies a permanent state of things,(3) yet when it is desired to speak of residence for a limited time a limiting adjective is applied, and when there is no such qualifying adjective permanent residence is understood.(4) The residence contemplated by the Letters Patent,(5) and (subject to Explanation I.) the Code, must be of a more or less permanent character, of such a nature as to show that the Court in which a defendant is sued is his natural forum.(6) The Court will not snatch a jurisdiction which was not intended to be conferred.(7) As regards Explanation I., vide post. Sect. 265 of the Contract Act is permissive and does not prohibit a suit elsewhere than at the place where the partnership was carried on, if a sufficient ground of jurisdiction exists.(8)

Explanation I.—The term residence is here applied to the temporary residence of a defendant in respect of a cause of action arising at the place where he has such temporary residence. That is an enlarging explanation for a limited purpose, and not an interpretation or definition of the word as usually understood.(9) The Explanation is identical with Explanation (a) to sect. 8 of the Small Cause Courts Act, XI. of 1865.(10) In respect of any cause of action arising at the place of permanent dwelling, he must be sued there.(11) The change in the Explanation appears to be of a verbal character.

Explanation II.—This is in general conformity with the English decisions, though under the Indian rule the carrying on of business is not only a circumstance for determining the residence of a company, but an independent ground of jurisdiction also.(1) The Secretary of State in Council is not a body corporate, though he may be used as such.(2) Foreign corporations or companies have their domicile in the country where they are incorporated, and thus come into existence. But they may also be deemed to reside in the country in which they have their seat and principal place of business.(3)

"Carries on business."—This phrase is of varying import, and must be interpreted according to the context and the apparent purpose of the Legislature.(4) In the first place this expression here connotes more than being busy or doing business merely, and more than mere service, employment, or occupation. A man who busies himself about science or politics, though he may have a great deal of business to transact in respect of these matters, does not "carry on business"; nor does a domestic servant, a clerk, or assistant in a trading or mercantile concern. The words mean the carrying on of business by the person whose business it is, and mean to describe a person managing or conducting his own, and not somebody else's, business. He must either manage or conduct a business of his own, or the business which is managed or conducted for him must be his own. The servant or employee is not carrying on his own business, but his master's. A person carries on business when he controls or directs it.(5)

The term "business" is not limited to commercial business. So where a person was in daily attendance on his patients as surgeon, apothecary, and accoucheur within a certain district, he was held to be carrying on business there.(6) It has, however, been held that zemindary business is not within the rule; (7) nor the receipts of presents or offerings.(8) There is a conflict of opinion as to whether the Government can (9) or cannot (10) be said to carry on business.

C. p. 321, that several suits have been decided in the High Courts and Presidency Small Cause Courts in which the cause of action did not accrue within the local limits of their jurisdiction; and those Courts could have jurisdiction only if the Government could be held to carry on business within those limits: see Ross Johnston v. Secretary of State, 2 Hyde, 153 (1864); P. & O. (10) Rundle v. Secretary of State, 1 Hyde, 37 (1863), in which it was said that Government should be sued where the cause of

In the under-mentioned case (1) the Court of first instance, whose judgment was reversed on appeal,(2) held that the carrying on of business must involve pretty much the same element of permanency as is necessary to convert a mere "staying" into "dwelling." But it does not seem to be necessary that the business should be carried on permanently, and each case must be decided on its own facts.(3) Thus a person who had no regular office, but went once or twice a week from the Mofussil to a friend's house in Calcutta, and saw people there on business, and contracted there with some man for the hire of cargo-boats, was held to carry on business or personally work for gain at Calcutta.(4)

The business need not be one carried on personally.(5) This is shown by the omission of the term "personally" before the words "carry on business," and its introduction before the words "work for gain." The defendant must, however, carry on some independent regular business in person, or at an office or other fixed place of business, either personally or by clerks or servants employed by the defendant, and conducting the business under his control, and in his individual or partnership name.(6) So in the last-mentioned case it was held that the defendant had no place of business in Madras, the sales being effected by another person, X, in his independent business or trade of a general broker for a commission received from the purchasers. In such case it was X, and not the defendant, who was carrying on business in Madras.

A person may carry on business at the same time at several places by means of different agents, as is often really the case. The employment, however, of a person as one's commission agent, or simply consigning goods to a commission,(7) or general,(8) agent for sale by him in the exercise of his own calling, does not constitute carrying on business at the place where that person or agent may be residing or carrying on his own business, or doing or selling what he may have been employed to do or sell. In the undermentioned case (1) it was held that a defendant does not carry on business at a place, though he may have an agent there for certain purposes connected with his business, where that which is the essential ingredient in his business does not take place within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court. In delivering judgment, Sausse, C.J., said: "To determine whether a defendant is carrying on business, it must first be ascertained what his particular trade, calling, or occupation is, and then we can examine whether the facts proved amount to a carrying on of that particular trade, calling, or occupation within the jurisdiction. The present defendant is admittedly a retail vendor in European goods, and obtains his livelihood by the profit which he makes upon his sales; without 'sale' he could not make profit; or, in other words, he could not carry on business for the purpose of gaining a livelihood. 'Sale' is an essential ingredient in carrying on this defendant's business, and in the present case, to give this Court cognizance of suit upon that ground, it must be shown that 'sale' by the defendant in the way of a retail dealer has taken place within our territorial limit. The place of sale, in the present case, is the true place of the defendant's carrying on business."

As to the question whether jurisdiction in regard to foreigners is limited to those who personally carry on business, vide ante, p. 174.

"Personally works for gain."—These words were inserted to give the Courts jurisdiction over persons who, though dwelling out of the local limits, personally worked for gain within them.(2) So a person residing at Ghoosery, outside Calcutta, who habitually and constantly came to Calcutta for the purpose of making contracts as part of his business as a contractor, was held to carry on business and work for gain in Calcutta.(3) An advocate of the High Court residing out of the local limits, but who holds himself out as ready to practise in the High Court and who goes whenever he is engaged to appear, personally works for gain within the local limits.(4) In order that jurisdiction should attach on the ground of working for gain, such working should be habitual.(5) Further, to constitute work there must be some mental or physical effort. To take advantage of an innate holiness as a reason for accepting presents or offerings as your natural due is not work; nor is the blessing which the defendant invokes upon the dwellings which he visits.(6) As to whether Government can be said to personally work for gain, vide ante, p. 180.

"Cause of action."—The meaning of this term has been the subject of considerable controversy, which, however, so far as this section is concerned, is now settled, and it is not proposed to do more than to give the references to the somewhat numerous decisions in which the question was discussed prior to the amendment of the section in 1888. Sometimes these words have been given the restricted sense of immediate occasion of the action, which itself means the right to have recourse to the Courts; in other and perhaps the greater number of cases, the wider sense of necessary conditions of its maintenance. In the former sense it is the mere matter of fact, the failure of the defendant to do, or forbear from doing, to give or make good, that which the plaintiff's right entitles him to insist upon—in other words, the infraction of the right, as, in the case of a contract, its breach. In the latter sense it is this matter of fact plus the right resident in the plaintiff, or, to take the example chosen, both the making of the contract and its breach.(1) In this last sense, "cause of action" therefore means every fact which is material to be proved to entitle the plaintiff to succeed; (2) and everything which, if not proved, gives the defendant an immediate right to judgment, must be part of the cause of action; (3) though the term does not comprise every piece of evidence which is necessary to prove each fact, but every fact which is necessary to be proved.(4) In this view of the case, the cause of action (which must exist at the date of the action (5)) is composed of several parts, which must, of course, necessarily include as one of such parts the infraction (6) of the right claimed.

The next question is, whether in order to give jurisdiction the whole cause of action should have arisen within the jurisdiction or whether it is sufficient that a part of such cause of action should have so arisen. As regards the Presidency High Courts, it is well settled that the term "cause of action," as used in clause 12 of the Charters (which, and not this section, governs such Courts) means the whole cause of action, and not a material part of it: (7)

though, if a part of the cause of action shall have arisen within the jurisdiction, a suit will lie in the High Court if leave have been previously obtained. For the purposes of the Letters Patent, the expression "cause of action" means the bundle of facts which it is necessary for the plaintiff to prove before he can succeed in his suit. It does not include irrelevant or immaterial facts, but embraces material facts without which the plaintiff must fail. If any of these material facts have taken place within the jurisdiction of the Court, then leave can be given under clause 12. But if no such material facts have taken place within the jurisdiction, and leave is given there, then it is open to the defendant to contend at the hearing that the Court has no jurisdiction.(1)

Prior to the amendment of the corresponding section of the last Code, in 1888, it was held that the words therein used did not mean the whole cause of action, but any material portion of the nature stated in Explanation III. to that section, which was added in the year mentioned. And therefore the Courts governed by the Code were held to have jurisdiction if such a material portion of the cause of action arose within their jurisdiction.(2) Sect. 7, Act VII. of 1888, gave effect to these decisions by adding the third Explanation to the former section, which rendered further discussion in the case of suits arising out of contract unnecessary (vide post). The rule, moreover, has been reaffirmed recently to be of general application in all suits.(3) And now the section expressly gives jurisdiction where the cause of action, wholly or in part, arises. No leave is required in the latter case.

Under the Code, British Courts are empowered to pass judgment against a non-resident foreigner, provided that the cause of action has arisen within the jurisdiction of the Court pronouncing the judgment.(4) The Court in whose local jurisdiction the funds of an endowment, received from a foreign territory, are expended by the parties residing there, has full power to determine questions as to the management of the funds, quite apart from the title to the grant, which may not be in dispute.(1) As to residence, etc., giving jurisdiction in case of foreigners, see post; and as to cases in which the cause of action arises below low-water mark and within three miles of it, the case undermentioned.(2)

Whatever the cause of action may be, the jurisdiction created at the place of its accrual is not affected by the death of the person originally liable, and it is a general principle that the representative of a deceased person may be sued in that Court within the jurisdiction of which the cause of action with the deceased person arose.(3) The accrual of a cause of action within the local limits of a Court's jurisdiction will not give the Court jurisdiction over a suit in which any other cause of action arising out of those limits is joined; it being, in fact, a pre-requisite of the right to join in one suit more than one cause of action against a defendant that the Court to which the plaint is presented should have jurisdiction over all the causes of action.(4)

The term "cause of action" as used in the Code applies to torts as well as contracts.(5) Reading clauses (a), (b), and (c) with the words "every suit," it appears that all suits of whatever nature, subject to the limitations in the preceding sections, are referred to. Sect. 19 contains special provisions with regard to suits for compensation for wrong done, but suits on tort not within the words of that section will fall under this. In India, the cause of action has been always held to furnish the forum not only of suits in contracts, but in its broader sense to apply also to suits on torts.

As already stated, the words "cause of action" in this section do not mean necessarily the whole cause of action, but a suit to which the section applies may be instituted where some portion of the cause of action arises.(6) So in a suit praying that a fraudulent compromise and decree founded thereon might be declared void, and for an injunction restraining execution, it was held that though the decree was made and compromise entered into in Calcutta (where in respect of them the cause of action arose), yet a material part of the cause of action, namely, the infringement of the plaintiff's right by executing the decree, having taken place in Cawnpore, the suit lay in that district.(7)

Though a special provision as to jurisdiction over suits on torts has been made in sect. 19, there is nothing in the general words of the present one to exclude them from its operation. The Courts will therefore have jurisdiction when the cause of action arises within their jurisdiction or the defendants reside, etc., there. And it is not necessary that both the constituents of jurisdiction should exist in British India.(1) The provisions of this section are independent of the general principles of international law; but there is nothing even in these principles to restrict the jurisdiction of the Courts of any country to cases in which the cause of action should have arisen in that country. In England it is settled that an action will lie there against a defendant there upon a transaction in a place in another country.(2) Explanation III. to the former section had no reference to torts. But the term "cause of action" was, under the last Code, independently of that explanation, construed to mean not the whole cause of action - if such cause of action involves more than the mere commission of the delict - in suits to which the Code applies.(3) Probably, the cause of action will usually be construed in a restricted sense, so as not to involve the right violated, but to denote only the violation or the breach of a duty which entitles the plaintiff to relief.(4) In any case, a large number of cases in tort will come within the special provisions of the preceding section. In a recent English case dealing with the effect of a judgment in the Calcutta High Court in divorce proceedings condemning in damages a defendant, a British subject, who though formerly resident in India, had left this country before the petition was issued, and was now domiciled in England, it was argued on his behalf that the Calcutta High Court had no jurisdiction over him; but it was held that the power to give damages was ancillary to the judgment on status concerning the marriage, which judgment, being in rem, would bind the world.(5)

A Court may entertain a suit to set aside a decree on the ground of fraud, provided that the requirements of this section or of the Charter, as the case may be, are satisfied.(6) In the case of a libel, the suit will lie where it has been published.(7) In a suit to set aside a release executed in Calcutta of the plaintiff's interest in certain property in Bombay, it was held that the cause of action included the effect of the release on the property in Bombay, and did not wholly arise in Calcutta.(8) This section, in the case of suits between landlord and tenant, is controlled by sect. 144 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.(1) In cases instituted under Act IX. of 1861, the Court is to be guided by the Code, and where there is an objection to jurisdiction this section will be considered.(2) As regards Probate jurisdiction, see Act V. of 1881.(3)

Explanation III. of former section.—This has been omitted, as its relation was considered unnecessary owing to the addition made to sub-clause (c) of the words "wholly or in part" in reference to the cause of action. Though omitted, the Explanation gave a correct statement of what is still the law (4) and is therefore here dealt with. This Explanation settled the signification of the term "cause of action" in the case of suits arising out of contract. Its language was wide enough to include all cases of contract, though not obligations in the nature of quasi contracts,(5) though it is said (6) that the corresponding rule of locus solutionis in other countries does not apply to contracts already executed or creating personal status. Certain relations, such as those of marriage and adoption, though originally based on contract, are not themselves sources of rights and duties on account of the grounds of contract.(7) While a suit may be arising out of contract within the meaning of the Explanation, it does not follow that all the clauses of that section will be applicable to it; as in the case of a suit arising out of contract claiming a sum payable not in performance of the contract, but as damages for its breach.(8) It may be a question whether the language of the Explanation is explicit enough to include suits for the cancellation of contract, the forum contractus in Roman law being generally held to apply to actions arising out of the natural development of the obligation, and, therefore, leading to its fulfilment. A suit for the cancellation of a contract must, however, always be for some cause; and the nature of the cause and the place of its accrual, and not necessarily the place of the contract, will furnish the forum for such suits.(9) But whether it does or not the suit will be within the section.

In suits arising out of contract the cause of action is deemed to arise, according to the omitted Explanation, at three places:—

(a) The place where the contract was made. The determination of this question belongs to the law of contracts. This will be the place of meeting where there is a personal meeting of the parties—except, perhaps, where the validity of a contract is made to depend upon the observance of a particular form, in which case the place at which that form is completed is the true place of the contract, because until such completion no party is bound.(10)

(10) Ib.

In the case of contract by correspondence, it has been held that the contract is considered made where the letter of acceptance is posted, and not where it is received by the proposer.(1) Where a balance was struck and an agreement to repay the balance was drawn out at Cawnpore, it was held that the Cawnpore Court had jurisdiction to entertain a suit on the agreement, and its jurisdiction was not affected by the fact of the transaction, in respect of which the agreement was given, having happened elsewhere.(2) Where the suit was brought upon the defendant's breach to deliver in the terms of the contract, and it did not appear where the contract, if any, was made, it was held that the mere fact that an advance on account of the contract was made within the local jurisdiction of a Court would not give the Court jurisdiction in such suit.(3) In the under-mentioned case it was held that, assuming that in the account for the balance of which the plaintiff sued there were some items which if they could be separated from the suit would give a cause of action within the jurisdiction of the Court at B., it was never the intention that the transactions should be disconnected so as to give separate causes of action, but that the items should be joined together so as to form the subject of one demand, and that the suit had been brought in the wrong Court.(4) As to the making, endorsement, and acceptance of negotiable instruments, see the cases below.(5)

(b) The place where the contract was to be performed or performance completed; or (c) where in performance any money to which the suit relates was expressly or impliedly payable. The determination of this question is also part of the law of contracts and the rules for their interpretation. The rule of the forum loci solutionis, as it is called, is applicable only where a particular place for performance can be fixed, and not therefore where the contract may be performed anywhere.(6) In some cases the place of performance is expressly fixed by the contract, in others by the nature of the act to be done in performance; as, for example, where the obligation is to build a house, or to do other work on real property.(7) Thus, also, in a suit to have a mortgage-deed registered, the cause of action was held to accrue at the place where the deed had to be registered under the law. From the nature of the act to be performed this was the place of the fulfilment of the obligation.(8) In some cases, provisions of positive law must be consulted.(1) Where no place for the performance is prescribed in the agreement, or exacted by the necessities of the case, or fixed by or in accordance with statutory law, the place where it should appear that the parties intended that the contract should be fulfilled ought to supply the forum.(2) In most such cases, the course of the business to which the contract relates, or in which anything will have to be done or any money to be paid, will determine the place of performance or payment.(3) In some cases, where no actual intention can be inferred, recourse may be had to presumptions—such as that under which performance is deemed to have been intended at the place where business was carried on by the person entitled under the contract; (4) or, where neither party has a fixed place of business, wherever (at any rate, in the case of contracts for payment of money) the creditor happens to be.(5) In the absence of any special promise as to delivery, goods sold are to be delivered at the place at which they are at the time of sale; and goods contracted to be sold are to be delivered at the place at which they are at the time of the contract for sale, or, if not then in existence, at the place at which they are produced.(6) The place of accrual of cause of action in suits for an account and balance due from an agent must be determined by a reference to the circumstances under which the situation of agency is contracted, and the promise to pay at a particular place must be implied where not expressly

Power to stay and transfer.—Sect. 20 of the last Code referring to stay of proceedings has been omitted.(1) The last paragraph of sect. 20 of the last Code had special application, if to any section, to sect. 20 (b).(2) But there appeared to be no reason or authority for restricting the general words of this section to sect. 17 of the last Code (corresponding with sect. 20 of this), or to any particular clause of it. The words "the defendant" would have had no meaning if the corresponding section of the Code of 1882 applied only to sect. 17, clause (c) of that Code, and, if it were so, the option of making the application would have been vested only in "any defendant not residing, carrying on business, or working for gain within the local limits of the Court's jurisdiction." The section, it was rightly said, appeared to be very comprehensive and to refer to all the preceding sections which provide for an alternative jurisdiction over suits.(3) The jurisdiction given by this sect. 20 was of an exceptional character, and should, it was held, be cautiously exercised and only upon very clear cause shown, there being no mention of mere convenience or expediency.(4) The section contemplated applications by different defendants, but it was hardly possible that after the rejection of an application by one defendant another application might be presented by another defendant on the same ground.(5) The present sections remodel and embody the provisions of sects. 22–24 of the last Code. Several difficulties have been removed by the altered phrasing. Thus sect. 22 omitted to qualify the words "another Court" by the words "having jurisdiction," which appeared in sects. 23

(3) Hukm Chand, C. P. C. 333, 334. The decision in Meckjee v. Kasowjee, 4 C. L. R. 282 (1879), appears to show that the Court's power to stay proceedings is very extensive, applying to different suits covering similar ground, and that on an application by a party to a suit, a cross suit may be stayed. Nothing, however, in the Code enables a Court to stay proceedings because costs in a previous litigation in a foreign Court have not been paid: Bowles v. Bowles, 8 B. 571 (1884).

(4) Kheta v. Ganga Ram, 1894, P. R. No. 8; following, 1893, All. W. N. 58; Geffert v. Ruckchand, 13 B. 178 (1888). In the first-mentioned case it was held that the circumstance that the points for decision in the case were analogous to those in a suit pending in a Court in another district was not sufficient reason for holding that justice was more likely to be done by compelling the plaintiff to sue in that district.

and 24. Again, it was not clear why the words "may determine" were used in sect. 23, and "shall determine" in sects. 22 and 24. Another difficulty was as to the nature of the application under sect. 24 of the last Code, as to which, see post.

"After notice."—The section does not provide for any requisites of the notice. But a Court may, in order to give effect to the manifest intention of the section, adjourn the hearing of an application and direct that proper notice should be served. Notice must be given to the "other parties"—i.e. not only parties on the opposite, but those on the same side—so that if one defendant only applies he must serve the other defendants with notice. In the under-mentioned case,(1) application was made in the presence of the other parties and was assumed to be with sufficient notice.

"Apply."—Primâ facie the plaintiff as the arbiter litis has a right to bring his suit in any Court which the law allows; and these sections are only intended to provide for those cases where, on the ground of expense or convenience or some other good reason, the Court thinks that the place of trial ought to be changed. Parties who desire to have a case transferred from one forum to another ought clearly to explain to the Court by petition and affidavit what is the nature of the claim and defence and what the issues are; they should state what evidence will be required, and then satisfy the Court that either on the ground of expense or convenience or otherwise the place of trial ought to be changed.(2) There was no indication in sect. 24 of the last Code of the nature of the application to be made to the High Court, the words "to transfer," etc., occurring in sects. 22 and 23 of that Code, being omitted. On this ground it was held that the section must be construed as intending something short of transfer, and that the section did not empower a High Court to transfer a suit, but only to declare in which Court it should proceed, and, if necessary, to stay proceedings within its own jurisdiction.(3) The words of the present sections, which apply to all the cases mentioned in sects. 22-24 of the last Code, remove any difficulty on this head.

"Objections."—If these are not put in on the first day, as they ought to be, a certain fixed time may be given for putting them in.(4)

"Shall determine."—The determination of the Appellate Court under sect. 23, clause (1), and of the High Court under clauses (2), (3), may be arrived at, not only on the grounds urged by the parties, but also on any grounds which may occur to the Court itself, which under those clauses would appear to have a discretion much like what it had under sect. 24 of the last Code.(5) The ground that the portion of the property in the local jurisdiction of another Court is of larger value has been considered not a sufficient ground for transfer to it.(6)

"Appellate Court."—Sect. 23, clause (1), shows that subordination for administrative purposes is immaterial, the sole test for the determination of the Court to which the application must be made will be that of appeals lying to it from the decisions of the Court in which the suit may have been instituted.

In some cases appeals lie from the decisions of a Court in different classes of suits to different Courts, and the Appellate Court in such cases will be the Court to which an appeal would lie in the class to which the suit instituted belongs.(1)

24. (1) On the application of any of the parties and after notice to the parties and after hearing such of them as desire to be heard, or of its own motion without such notice, the High Court or the District Court may at any stage— [s. 25.]

General power of transfer and withdrawal.

(a) transfer any suit, appeal or other proceeding pending before it for trial or disposal to any Court subordinate to it and competent to try or dispose of the same, or

(b) withdraw any suit, appeal or other proceeding pending in any Court subordinate to it, and

(i) try or dispose of the same; or

(ii) transfer the same for trial or disposal to any Court subordinate to it and competent to try or dispose of the same; or

(iii) retransfer the same for trial or disposal to the Court from which it was withdrawn.

(2) Where any suit or proceeding has been transferred or withdrawn under sub-section (1), the Court which thereafter tries such suit may, subject to any special directions in the case of an order of transfer, either retry it or proceed from the point at which it was transferred or withdrawn.

(3) For the purposes of this section, Courts of Additional and Assistant Judges shall be deemed to be subordinate to the District Court.

(4) The Court trying any suit transferred or withdrawn under this section from a Court of Small Causes shall, for the purposes of such suit, be deemed to be a Court of Small Causes.

"On the application."—A separate application is required for the transfer of each suit.(2) In the case of a minor a next friend may apply where no guardian ad litem has been appointed.(3)

"Of any of the parties."—A person who has received a notice of an application made by a judgment-debtor to be declared an insolvent, and whose name is on the record as an opposing creditor, is a party on whose application a transfer may be made under this section.(1) The section permits transfer upon the application of parties as well as of the Court's own motion without such application.(2)

"Notice."—The present section, unlike the two previous sections, requires notice to be given by the Court and not by the party. Where the order was made without notice having been given to the plaintiffs it was set aside.(3) The provision as to notice is one of procedure and practice, and the requirements as to notice may be waived.(4)

"At any stage."—These words have been added to the first paragraph to remove the difficulty created by the view that a suit cannot be transferred after the hearing has once commenced, as to which there was a conflict of decision. See note, post, "Pending."

Power of High Court to transfer.—Besides the powers conferred by this section, the High Court, under clause 13 of the Letters Patent, has power to transfer to itself only when it thinks proper to do so, either on the agreement of the parties to that effect or for purposes of justice, the reasons for doing so being recorded in the proceedings of the High Court. No statement of the grounds on which the Court will act can be exhaustive. Transfers have been granted on the following grounds: That the parties and witnesses reside in Calcutta; that it would be cheaper to try the suit there; that all parties desired a transfer; (5) that $\frac{19}{35}$ of the property claimed was in Calcutta, and that it was undesirable that an amin of a Mofussil Court should partition such property; that the suit might be tried more cheaply and expeditiously in Calcutta; (6) that difficult questions of law were involved, and the conduct of the Judge towards the plaintiff made it impossible that he should be able to deal with the suit with impartiality or freedom from prejudice; (7) that the questions involved were of importance or difficulty; the balance of convenience or cheapness of trial; the residence of parties really interested and witnesses either in Calcutta or its immediate neighbourhood; the advance of money and presence of books in Calcutta; the defendant's want of means to go herself or take her

S. 94, transfer was granted on the ground that difficult points of law arose, and it generally appeared that the case should not be tried in the Mofussil, provided that the interests of the applicant will be prejudiced if there be no transfer: Borrodaile v. Gregory Bourke, Part II. Ex. O. C. J. 1 (1865).

witnesses to a Mofussil Court; the refusal to transfer placing difficulties in the way of the defence; and that the prayers for injunction and receiver rendered the case eminently one to be tried in the High Court.(1) It has also been held that the mere fact that it would be less expensive to try the case in the High Court was not sufficient of itself for the Court to act upon and order the case to be transferred, and that to justify transfer it must be shown that the trial in the Court in which the suit had been instituted would be unsatisfactory.(2)

The application should be made to a Judge sitting on the original side of the Court (3) The substantive law applicable to the case will be the law of the Court from which it has been transferred.(4) The words "to remove and try and determine" in the Letters Patent have a wide signification. They are not limited to any particular period or stage of the suit, considered as a regular series of steps in procedure. After the commencement of a suit between parties, as long as the proceedings in the Court of first instance are in such a condition that the party is entitled to ask that Court to raise and judicially determine any question material to the final result of the suit as between himself and the other party, so long is the suit in existence in the first Court, and capable of being removed under clause 13 in order that such questions may be determined in the High Court.(5)

District Court.—In the Punjab, Central Provinces, and Burmah, the Courts of the Divisional Judge and Commissioner are by the Courts Acts of those provinces given the powers conferred on the District Court by this section, which has not been drafted with reference to the system of judicial administration prevailing in the provinces mentioned.(6) An order of transfer made by a District Court under this section, transferring a suit in which an appeal would lie from a decree made therein, was held not subject to revision.(7) And the principle was considered to apply where a District Judge had transferred a suit from a Subordinate Court to his own file, and before his hearing it an application was made to the High Court for its transfer to some other Court.(8) The High Court refused in its extraordinary jurisdiction to interfere, except under circumstances of a very special nature, with the discretion of a Judge who had transferred, under the provisions of the last Code, execution proceedings under a decree from one Subordinate Court to another.(9) It was held, under the Code of 1859, that where a District Court had jurisdiction to try a suit and the defendant made no application to the Judge or communication to the plaintiff with a view to its being tried in a different district, the case was not one for the exercise of any special power by the High Court for that purpose.(1)

"Transfer or withdraw."—This section, which corresponds with sect. 25 of the last Code, is clearly worded to show that it applies both to the transfer and withdrawal of suits, covering also transfers to a Court newly established. There is no restriction as to the grounds on which a transfer or withdrawal may be ordered under this section, which applies to the High Court, whose powers under the Letters Patent have already been considered. A usual ground is personal disqualification on account of pecuniary or other personal interest of the presiding Judge.(2) A transfer has been ordered on the ground that serious questions of law were likely to arise in connection with winding-up proceedings, which it would be difficult to discuss in the absence of the necessary authorities, and that the proceedings were such that they would ultimately go before the High Court in a variety of appeals from orders; (3) also of execution proceedings "in order to do equity between the judgment-creditors according to the spirit of the Civil Procedure Code"; (4) also on the ground that the transfer would tend to the convenience of both parties, and more especially to the applicant.(5) The fact, however, that the Judge of the Court was not sufficiently acquainted with the character in which the disputed signatures were written was held not to be sufficient ground, as in such a case it would be open to the parties to call experts.(6)

The section does not make it obligatory in a Court to record the reasons for its order, and though it is desirable that the reasons should be recorded, yet a failure to do so will not vitiate the order or the subsequent proceedings.(7) Nor is the transfer invalid if the order has been made under a misconception of facts.(8) As to the presumption where there is no order on the face of the proceedings, see note; (9) as to jurisdiction to transfer, see note, "Pending." post.

"Suit, appeal, or other proceeding."—The term "suit" in the earlier Code should, it was held, be construed in its broadest sense.(10) The section itself shows that it is applicable to appeals; a power which was not given to the High Courts by the Letters Patent.(11) or appeals. The case law under the Code of 1882 was as follows:—As regards miscellaneous proceedings, this section, taken with sect. 647 (corresponding with sect. 141), was held to authorize the transfer of a claim under sect. 331;(1) and of winding-up proceedings under the Indian Companies Act, 1882, by the High Court from a District Court to itself, the Act providing for their transfer from one District Court to another.(2) There was a conflict of opinion whether the word "suit" in the section which this replaces included execution proceedings or not. The Allahabad (3) and Bombay (4) High Courts held that it did. It is to be observed that sect. 223 of the former Code related to transfer of applications for execution. The Madras High Court appears to have been of opinion that the word "suit" in this section in the last Code was used in its restricted sense of proceedings before decree, but that even assuming that it included execution proceedings, the limitation as to jurisdiction contained in the section, which authorized the transfer to a Subordinate Court competent to try the suit, could only be imported into sect. 223 of the Code of 1882, so far as it was consistent with that section.(5) The Calcutta High Court held, both under the corresponding provisions in the Code of 1859,(6) as also under the Code of 1882,(7) that there was no power under this section of that Code to transfer execution proceedings. The present section extends the Courts' power over miscellaneous proceedings other than suits or appeals.

"Pending."—The word used in the corresponding section of the Code of 1859 was "instituted." It was accordingly held that the transfer could take place only on the institution of the suit, and that it was not intended that a case in progress of trial might be transferred.(8) The substitution of the word

R. 147 (1865), in which it was held that when a Judge transfers a case to his own file, he is at liberty to amend the issues first laid down, and to frame additional issues and to go into the whole case except upon any question upon which there has been a judicial finding. And as to remand, see this case and Mahomed Zahoor v. Thakooranee Rutta, 2 N. W. P. 481 (1870).

"pending" bars any such construction in future; a construction which is further prohibited by the insertion of the words "at any stage." So it has been held, that the High Court had jurisdiction under this section to make a transfer to a Subordinate Judge, though the case was in part heard.(1) Even now, however, the section will not authorize a transfer affecting any special exclusive jurisdiction conferred by law.(2) So as the Court which pronounced the judgment is the only Court which can review it, proceedings on an application for a review of a Court's decision cannot be transferred to another Court.(3) Nor may a District Court exercise its powers to transfer so as to oust any Court of a jurisdiction over any particular suit which may have been referred to it by order of a High Court or other Supreme Court.(4) Thus, it has been held that the terms of the section are inapplicable to a suit which the Subordinate Court had received by an order of remand from a Court to which the District Court was itself subordinate.(5)

The word "pending" denotes, it is said, duly pending. The suit, therefore, to be transferred must, it has been held, be pending in a Court of competent jurisdiction, and an order made under this section will have no effect if the Court in which the suit is pending has no jurisdiction over it.(6)

"Subordinate."—A transfer may be made only from or to a Court to which the Code applies. In the under-mentioned case,(7) Hutchins, J., considered that the District Judge would have the power of transferring a case pending before one village munsif to another, not under this section, which he considered questionable, but under general principles, as some one must have the power, and it would be best vested in the munsif's official superior, the District Judge. The subordination contemplated is apparently not that for the purposes of appeal as in sect. 23, clause (1), ante, but of an administrative character.(1) It was formerly held that once a Court withdrew a suit and transferred it to its own files for trial, it exhausted all its powers under this section, and it is not competent to retransfer it again to a Subordinate Court.(2) The section, however [see (1) (b) (iii)], now authorizes a Court after withdrawing a case to retransfer it for trial or disposal. The Subordinate Court must be competent to try the suit—that is, must have jurisdiction.(3) A District Judge can transfer a probate case for trial to a Subordinate Judge under clause (d), sub-sect. (2), sect. 23, Act XII. of 1887.(4) Where in a recent case a suit was filed as a Small Cause Court suit in the Court of a Subordinate Judge who had both Small Cause and regular jurisdiction, and he transferred it to the file tried by him as ordinary Judge, and passed a decree deciding a question of title to immoveable property, it was held that there was no substantial irregularity, and that the decree was not final, but appealable, since it could not have been passed by a Small Cause Court.(5) As to the power of District Judges, under the Bombay Civil Courts Act, to refer to Assistant Judges applications under special Acts for disposal, see note.(6)

"Try or dispose of."—The word "trial" includes every recognized method of procedure laid down in the Code, and it is not necessary for the transfer that the Court transferring should not contemplate a reference of the case to arbitration (7) The present section adds the words "dispose of." which will often be applicable in the case of the miscellaneous proceedings to which the section is extended.

"Court of Small Causes."—The expression "a Court of Small Causes" in the last clause of this section means a Court properly and strictly so called, and does not include a Court invested with the jurisdiction of a Court of Small Causes.(8) The High Court, in the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction, has the power to transfer a suit from the Calcutta Court of Small Causes to any other Court having equal or superior jurisdiction.(9) The Court to which a suit is transferred will not become a Small Cause Court, but only the suit transferred will be tried as a Small Cause Court suit.(1) In the case under-mentioned,(2) a Small Cause Court suit was instituted before a Judge invested with jurisdiction to try it. INSTITUTION OF SUITS.

Institution of suits.

26. Every suit shall be instituted by the presentation of a plaint or in such other manner as may be prescribed.

"Plaint."—A plaint means a private memorial tendered to a Court in which the person sets forth his cause of action; the exhibition of an action in writing.(3) It answers to the "statement of claim" in England. In India a plaintiff may present a written statement also. O. VII. rr. 1–6 prescribe the contents of the plaint, which is the document with which every suit is instituted in this country, its object being to invoke the Court's assistance for the declaration, preservation, or enforcement of the plaintiff's right. A suit, according to this section, must commence with a plaint; and a proceeding which is capable of terminating in a decree or an order having the force of a decree cannot, on that ground alone, be deemed to be a suit within the meaning of the Code, if it has not commenced with a plaint. Such a proceeding is, in strictness, only a proceeding in a suit.(4)

Presentation: (a) Time.—The only question which arises as to this, is whether a plaint may be presented on a Sunday or holiday, or out of Court hours. It has been enjoined that, without the consent of parties and in the absence of urgent necessity, no civil trial should proceed on Sundays or gazetted holidays.(1) In India, however, Sunday is not a dies non,(2) and the holding of a judicial proceeding on a close holiday, though it may be an irregularity which, if prejudice be shown, would entitle a party to have the proceedings set aside, is such an irregularity as can be waived.(3) It has been expressly provided in the Bengal, N.W.P., and Assam Civil Courts Act, and the same will probably be held, on general principles, to be the case, that a judicial act done on a close holiday is not invalid by reason only of its having been done on that day.(4) A plaint may be received and admitted on a Sunday(5) or other holiday.(6) There is, however, no necessity to do so; for under the Limitation Act, if the period expires when the Courts are closed, the suit may be admitted on the day that the Court re-opens; and so may any application.(7)

(b) To whom.—The former section required that the plaint should be presented to the Court, or such officer who was specially appointed in that behalf. This will be so now, though the words have been omitted. Ordinarily, the plaint is presented to the Court. A delivery to the clerk of a Small Cause Court has been held sufficient; (8) but not to a nazir (9) or moonserim.(10) A plaint under Act X. of 1859, presented to an Assistant Collector and not to the Collector, was held not to be properly filed.(11)

(c) Place.—Ordinarily, the plaint is presented in open Court. The placing of a petition of appeal on a table when the officer is not present is not a presentation to him.(12) The Allahabad High Court held that the presentation of a plaint at the private residence of the Munsif was not a sufficient institution.(13) But in Bengal a plaint delivered at the private residence of a clerk of a Small Cause Court has been held to have been properly filed.(14) Where a plaint sent by post was accepted, the institution was considered sufficient by the Madras High Court.(1) Where a plaintiff presented a plaint to the District Court, the Subordinate Judge's Court in which he ought to have presented it being then temporarily closed, it was held that the District Court could not be considered a Court of first instance competent to receive the plaint.(2)

Date.—The Code does not provide that the plaint should be dated, but it is generally provided by rules framed by the High Courts that the actual date of presentation should be endorsed on the plaint by the officer receiving it. Where a plaint was presented on the 29th and the endorsement stated that it was accepted on the 31st, the former and not the latter date was held to be the date of institution.(3) Where two suits are filed on the same day it must be presumed, until the contrary is proved, that they were presented and admitted in the order in which the numbers appear in the Register of Civil Suits.(4) The Code does not ordain or imply that, in the absence of a sufficient stamp, there can be no presentation, nor does the Limitation Act. There is no warrant for inferring that a plaint means a plaint duly stamped. So where a plaint was presented on the 14th September with an insufficient stamp, but the deficient stamp duty was paid on the 18th September, it was held that the suit was instituted on the 14th September.(5) The date of institution should be reckoned from the date of presentation, and not from that on which the requisite court-fees are subsequently put in so as to make it admissible as a plaint.(6)

Registration.—Sect. 17 of the Registration Act (III. of 1877) does not apply to proper judicial proceedings, whether consisting of pleadings filed by the parties or orders made by the Court.(7)

INTEREST.

Interest.

34. (1) Where and in so far as a decree is for the payment of money, the Court may, in the decree, order interest at such rate as the Court deems reasonable to be paid on the principal sum adjudged, from the date of the suit to the date of the decree, in addition to any interest adjudged on such principal sum for any period prior to the institution of the suit, with further interest at such rate as the Court deems reasonable on the aggregate sum so adjudged, from the date of the decree to the date of payment, or to such earlier date as the Court thinks fit.

(2) Where such a decree is silent with respect to the payment of further interest on such aggregate sum as aforesaid from the date of the decree to the date of payment or other earlier date, the Court shall be deemed to have refused such interest, and a separate suit therefor shall not lie.

Interest.—Act XXIII. of 1861, sect. 10. The words "when a decree is for the payment of money," and the second paragraph of sect. 209 of the last Code which the present section replaces, were introduced by sect. 20, Act. VII. of 1888. It only deals with interest after suit. As regards interest up to the date of suit, this is a question of substantive law.(1) Ordinarily and subject to the exceptions recognized by that law, the rate agreed upon must be awarded up to the date of suit.(2) Interest after date of suit is, according to the opinion of the Calcutta,(3) though not of the Madras High Court,(4) in the discretion of the Court, notwithstanding that a fixed rate of interest is mentioned as payable "up to realization." No additional Court fee is required on account of the claim for interest from the date of institution of suit till payment.(5) There is no analogy between interest awarded under this section and mesne profits under O. XX. r. 12, post.(6)

Sect. 86 of the Transfer of Property Act (now O. XXXIV. r. 2) excludes the discretion given by this section, and binds the Court to decree the rate of interest provided by the mortgage, if not illegal, down to the date fixed by the Court according to the terms of the second paragraph of the section.(7) After this period, interest will run at the Court rate up to date of payment according to the practice and rules of the Calcutta High Court.(8) This section relates to a decree for money, and a mortgage decree, until it reaches the stage shown by sect. 90 of the Transfer of Property Act, cannot be so termed.(9)

The Court has also a discretion to award interest after decree. The contract becomes merged in the decree, and the plaintiff recovers only such interest as, according to the course and practice of the Court, is allowed on debts for which the creditor has the security of its decree.(1) Interest if not given in the decree is taken to have been refused,(2) but a party may by his conduct be estopped from objecting that execution cannot issue for a higher rate than that provided in the decree.(3) If a decree-holder gives up a portion of his claim and verbally agrees to receive the remainder by instalments, he does not thereby give up interest to which he is entitled under the decree.(4) The rule of damdupat exists only so long as the contractual relation of debtor and creditor exists, but not when that relation has come to an end by reason of a decree.(5) Thus where a decree has been passed on a mortgage the rule does not apply to the interest accruing after the date fixed for redemption.(6) The rule of damdupat is not applicable if it was not applicable at the time when the decree became final and binding.(7) The discretionary powers conferred by this section may be exercised without reference to the law of damdupat.(8)

"In the decree."—A Court is not empowered by this section merely to embody in a decree interest which has been adjudged payable in the suit, for it is said that such a reading of the section would make it surplusage, as it does not require a rule of procedure to enable a Court to decree a relief which it has adjudged in its judgment.(9) It has therefore been held that the Court may in the decree order payment of interest from the date of the suit onwards, although the judgment awards interest for the period prior to the institution of the suit only.(10) But where a Judge in adjudging a specific sum, principal and interest, in terms dismissed "the rest of the claim," it was held that as the claim for interest after the institution of the suit was part of "the rest of the claim," and with it stood dismissed, the Court could not give interest by way of amendment of its decree.(11) Where a district Judge gave no interest from the date of the suit, and there was nothing to show that this was an over-

COSTS.

35. (1) Subject to such conditions and limitations as may be prescribed, and to the provisions of any law for the time being in force, the costs of and incident to all suits shall be in the discretion of the Court, and the Court shall have full power to determine by whom or out of what property and to what extent such costs are to be paid, and to give all necessary directions for the purposes aforesaid. The fact that the Court has no jurisdiction to try the suit shall be no bar to the exercise of such powers.

Costs.

(2) Where the Court directs that any costs shall not follow the event, the Court shall state its reasons in writing. [s. 220.]

(3) The Court may give interest on costs at any rate not exceeding six per cent. per annum, and such interest shall be added to the costs and shall be recoverable as such. [s. 222.]

Costs generally.—The present section replaces sects. 218-222 of the last Code. The first clause is with some additions taken from s. 5 of the Judicature Act of 1890, and in effect embodies the provisions of sects. 218-220 of the last Code. As regards the subject of execution, see sect. 36 of this Code. Sect. 221 has been transferred to O. XX. r. 6, where it appears as the third clause of that rule. Sect. 222 is incorporated in the third clause of this section, the direction as to the payment of costs being paid out of or charged upon the subject-matter of the suit being omitted. The power to order this is contained in the first clause of this section. As regards this, it has been held that a mortgagee having had the benefit of a partition, and having accepted and approved of it as part of his title, was, though not a party to the partition suit, bound by the equities attaching to the mortgaged property as incidents of the partition, and was therefore liable in respect of a proportionate share of the charge for costs created by the order of the Court made in that suit under this section, and such proportionate share of these costs should be deducted in priority out of the proceeds of the sale of the mortgaged property.(2) Under the circumstances stated, the cases decided under the former sections are here given.

Disposal of costs.—Sect. 218 of the last Code enacted that "When disposing of any application under this Code, the Court may give to either party the costs of such application, or may reserve the consideration of such costs for any future stage of the proceedings." When costs of an interlocutory proceeding have been disposed of, the award of general costs of the suit does not interfere with that interlocutory order.(1) A Court finally determining a suit is bound to decide by which of the parties before it the costs shall be borne; it is not at liberty to declare that the costs shall be borne by the unsuccessful party in a suit to be hereafter brought.(2) A decree drawn strictly in accordance with the provisions of sect. 88, of the Transfer of Property Act, directs the costs to be recovered out of the mortgaged property.(3) An omission to award costs cannot be considered a mere clerical error, but must be rectified by way of review within the prescribed time.(4)

Parties paying or receiving costs.—The person who receives the costs must, of course, be a party to the suit. As regards the person who may be ordered to pay, the general rule in English Courts has been said to be,(5) that Courts have no power except over parties to the record, though an exception has been made where the party before the Court is a mere puppet in the hands of a stranger to the suit. The Courts here have, in some cases, ordered persons not party to the record to pay costs.(6) But under the last Code only parties could be made liable. This appeared from the words, "any other party to the suit" in sect. 102 of that Code.(7) Where, however, there has been a contempt of Court, as where strangers were the real though hidden plaintiffs, and had executed a false lease in favour of the nominal plaintiff, who had brought the suit on the strength of such false lease, it was held that though the Code gave no power, yet that the High Court, inheriting the powers of the Supreme Court, could order such strangers to pay the costs of the suit.(8) Persons interested, on behalf of whom a suit is brought under O. I. r. 8 (formerly sect. 30), but not joining or joined as parties, should not be made to pay costs.(9) Where a party is made defendant without cause of action his co-defendant of course should not be made to pay his costs, which should be paid by the plaintiff.(1) But the Court may, in a proper case, order one defendant to pay the costs of another defendant.(2) So where a defendant has colluded with the plaintiff and induced him to bring the suit, he may not only be made to pay his co-defendant's costs, but refused his own.(3) And in a suit brought against several parties, some of whom admitted the debt and partnership and others denied them, the defendants who disputed the claim were made to pay the costs of those who admitted it.(4)

Sect. 219 of the last Code provided that, "the judgment shall direct by whom the costs of each party are to be paid, whether by himself or by any other party to the suit, and whether in whole or in what part or proportion."

As to the liability of minors, next friends, and guardians ad litem for costs, see notes to O. XXXII. If the Official Assignee defends a suit he is liable, in the event of failure, to be ordered to pay the plaintiff's costs in the same way as any other defendant, and if the estate be insufficient to pay the costs, he will have to bear them personally.(5) As regards executors,(6) administrators,(7) trustees,(8) and mortgagees, (9) the English O. 65, r. 1 provides that nothing in it shall be held to deprive any of these persons who has not unreasonably

Power of Court as to costs.—Sect. 220 of the last Code provided as follows: "(1) The Court shall have full power to give and apportion costs of every application and suit in any manner it thinks fit, and the fact that the Court has no jurisdiction to try the case is no bar to the exercise of such power: Provided that if the Court directs that the costs of any application or suit shall not follow the event, the Court shall state its reason in writing. (2) Every order relating to costs made under this Code and not forming part of a decree may be executed as if it were a decree for money."

The discretion to award costs was subject to other provisions, and was thus limited in the case of certain suits instituted in the High Court, but cognizable by the Presidency Small Cause Courts.(7) Where A demanded a particular sum as due to him from B, and the latter tendered a less amount, saying that that was all he owed, it was held in an action brought in the High Court that A was entitled to full costs, not being under any obligation to accept the lesser sum and sue for the balance in the Small Cause Court.(8) For sections of the Code affecting the discretion, see O. XI. r. 3 and O. XXI. r. 72. The power, however, given, though a full power, was subject to the control of the Court of Appeal.(9) The discretion as to the award of costs which a Court has is not taken away by the fact that a party to a suit is protected under the provisions of the Judicial Officers Protection Act.(10)

As regards apportionment, the general rule is that if a plaintiff recovers a less amount than he claimed in his plaint, his costs should be apportioned

according to the amount recovered and not to the sum claimed.(1) Costs thus follow the result of the case unless there are reasons to the contrary; so that where the plaintiff has failed in part and succeeded in part, the costs are apportioned so as to give each party the costs applicable to the matter upon which he has succeeded.(2) It is, however, not correct to say that costs must be invariably awarded in proportion to the amount decreed and dismissed. The Court has a discretion, and if a plaintiff has an honest claim in which he mainly succeeds he may be allowed full costs.(3) As to costs of particular issues, see post, "Follow the event." The Court is given a wide discretion, but that discretion must be exercised on legal principles. It is a power to be exercised according to law and not according to mere caprice.(4) The law as to the award of costs has been laid down by Jessel, M.R., in Cooper v. Whittingham,(5) in a passage which has been cited and adopted by the Madras High Court.(6) An Appellate Court will not interfere with an exercise of discretion by the lower Court unless it has proceeded upon a manifestly wrong ground.(7) See post.

"Follow the event."—This means the result of the decision.(8) The second paragraph of the section indicates that costs must follow the event, unless there be good cause to the contrary. If a plaintiff succeeds he is ordinarily entitled to his costs.(9) If a defendant succeeds he is ordinarily entitled to his costs.(10) A plaintiff thus cannot get costs against a person against whom he has no cause of action.(11) And a successful defendant cannot be made to pay the costs of the plaintiff.(12) If a party substantially succeeds and proves his case against the defendant he is entitled to his costs, although he has not got the precise form of relief which he wanted.(13) The mistakes of the opposite party are no reason for departing from the general rule of law that a successful party is entitled to his costs.(1) The word "event" may, however, be read distributively, and where there are distinct causes of action the general costs of the cause follow the judgment, but the costs of the particular issues should be taxed in favour of the party who has succeeded on them.(2) And the same rule is commonly applied in all cases where several issues are raised, and the party fails as to some and is successful as to others.

The same general principles apply in the case of appeals,(3) though the cost of an appeal may be severable from the general costs of the suit.(4) It is a general, but not a universal rule, that the discretion of the Court below as to costs is not altered when there is no substantial alteration made in the decree itself.(5) The respondent will not be deprived of costs on the dismissal of the appeal on the ground that the appellant had no previous notice of the preliminary objection which has prevailed.(6) In his appeal from the Judge's order passed in favour of the plaintiff, and disallowing his own claim for costs, a defendant unnecessarily made a co-defendant a respondent. As this respondent could not be injured in any way in the appeal, it was held by Sir Barnes Peacock (Mitter, J., dissenting) that although the appeal was dismissed, the co-defendant was not entitled to costs simply because he had been present watching the case.(7) When an Appellate Court decrees an appeal and gives costs of its own Court, the costs of the first Court should be included in the decree.(8) A decree for "usual costs and interest" means all costs which the successful party has incurred from the commencement of the suit until the date of the final decree with interest at (now) 6 per cent. from the date of the decree.(9) A direction in a decree that "the respondent should pay to the appellants the costs incurred by them in the Lower Court" means the costs specified in the decree appealed against as the costs incurred by the appellants.(10) Where a decree under which costs have been recovered is set aside in appeal, an express order is not needed for a refund of the costs with interest.(11)

The same principles are applied in appeals to the Privy Council where the successful appellant is, as a rule, entitled to his costs.(1) But where an appeal was affirmed upon wholly different grounds from those relied upon by the Court below, the dismissal was ordered to be without costs.(2) And where a partial alteration was made by the Appellate Court in the decree of the Court below, as to the rate of interest awarded, but in other respects the decree was affirmed, both parties were directed to pay their own costs of appeal.(3) No costs have been given where the parties maintained pleas far in excess of their respective legal rights; (4) or where the appellant has failed as to part of his appeal; (5) or where the appellant has used forged documents.(6) Costs occasioned by the introduction of unnecessary and irrevelant matter into the record have been disallowed.(7)

A Court may, however, direct that costs shall not follow the event, but if it does, it must be for good cause, and its reasons must be stated in writing; a provision enacted both to secure a proper exercise of discretion and in order that the Court of Appeal may be in a position to control the order. It is not possible to define what is good cause. The rule laid down in Cooper v. Whittingham (8) that "where a plaintiff comes to enforce a legal right, and there has been no misconduct on his part, the Court cannot take away his right to costs," has been adopted in this country (9) and by the Court of Appeal in England. But the same Court has held (10) that misconduct was not necessary to constitute good cause for depriving a successful plaintiff of costs. "Everything which increases the litigation and the costs, and which places upon the defendant a burden which he ought not to bear in the course of that litigation, is perfectly 'good cause' for depriving the plaintiff of his costs." (11) The Court may consider not merely the conduct of the party in the actual litigation, but may take into consideration matters which led up to it.(12) Where a defendant has by his mis-statements, made under circumstances imposing an obligation on him to be truthful, brought litigation on himself, and rendered an action against him reasonable, there is good cause for depriving him of his costs.(13) If the action is frivolous or vexatious, the plaintiff may be deprived of costs.(1) If the Court thinks that the suit is a vexatious one and that no real damage has been sustained, it may give nominal damages to the plaintiff and award costs to the defendant, as in substance in such a case the defendant succeeds.(2) Costs have been disallowed where a party acted with malice and malevolence,(3) as distinguished from mere hardness, in exercising a civil right,(4) and where the defence was found to be false and unscrupulous.(5) A party has been refused costs where he induced plaintiff to sue him; (6) or did not raise the plea of jurisdiction on which he succeeded until special appeal.(7) It has been held that the fact that a defendant has, previously to a suit being filed, admitted that the money sued for was due was not a ground for depriving plaintiff of his costs.(8) This would be so if, though making an admission, a defendant was unwilling or refused to pay. But if not so, aliter, for the Court may deprive a plaintiff of costs where his suit is needlessly launched.(9) See also cases cited ante in connection with appeals to the Courts of this country, or the Privy Council. It is not possible to formulate any precise rules. As has been well said, "We can get no nearer to a perfect test than the enquiry whether it would be more fair as between the parties that some exception should be made in the special instance to the rule that the costs should follow upon success." (10)

Separate Costs.—Where the interests of the parties are separate and distinct and they have different defences, separate costs should be allowed to each (11), as where the defendants are zemindar and patnidar, whose defences were not necessarily identical; (12) or where, in a suit to recover possession of land, one of the defendants pleaded successfully that he had nothing to do with the land, and the other defendants claimed title, and also succeeded in their defence; (1) or where the defendants were charged with falsely misappropriating property and some of them might have failed in their defence and others succeeded.(2) But where the interests of the defendants are the same, as is ordinarily the case with joint holders; (3) or several representatives of the same original mortgagees; (4) or persons are sued for damages on a cause of action common to all; (5) in short, where the defences are common and identical and not separate, or from any cause defendants file separate defences unnecessarily,(6) only one set of costs should be awarded.

Calculation of Costs.—In the High Courts, rules exist under which there is a regular scale of costs, and the parties' costs are taxed according to this scale. Pleaders' fees must also be calculated according to the rules governing them.(7) The scale on which costs should be awarded to a defendant depends on what the plaintiff claims against him; (8) and so where in a suit for partition two widows who had a claim for maintenance only were made parties, their pleaders were held entitled to percentage only on the amount claimed by them for maintenance.(9) When a suit contains several distinct claims against separate defendants, the amount of costs to be allowed to each depends on the claims against him.(10) Where co-sharers were made defendants in order to plaintiff obtaining a complete decree, the plaintiff must, it was held, pay costs sufficient to cover expenses of appearance.(11) As against his own clients, in the absence of any rule or express agreement, a pleader is only entitled to reasonable remuneration for his work and labour.(12) Costs in an application for revocation of probate have been assessed as in a miscellaneous proceeding.(13) The costs which a defeated plaintiff should be required to pay are those necessarily incurred by the successful party in the defence in the suit. Costs cannot be deemed necessary if by reasonable diligence on the part of the defendant or his pleader the expenditure of them could be avoided.(14) Among items which have been allowed are salary of accountant,(15) expenses in connection with attachment of defendant's property when suit is dismissed,(1) and stamp for plaint.(2)

Execution for Costs.—The portion of sect. 220 as relating to execution is omitted. See now sect. 36. If the order for costs forms part of a decree, such decree is executed in the ordinary way. Where, in a partition suit, the plaintiff, after decree, took no steps, but the estate was partitioned at the instance of one of the defendants, it was held that he must first obtain an order for payment, and if payment be not obtained then apply for execution.(3) If the order does not form part of the decree it may be executed as if it were a decree for the payment of money. But such an order is not a decree.(4) A mamlatdar has the same power to levy costs decreed by the High Court as he has regarding costs decreed in his own court.(5) No separate suit lies for the recovery of costs awardable under the Code, a remedy in execution being given.(6) But where a Court is not entitled to order costs and costs are incurred, they may be made the subject of consideration in a subsequent suit.(7) If it can order costs and does not do so, no separate suit will lie.(8) An objection as to costs is a matter which should be raised in the shape of an application to amend or review the original decree, and failing that, by way of regular appeal against the decree, but no objection can be raised in execution of it.(9) A summary remedy for payment of costs against his client has been given to solicitors, but they cannot under the rule of Court so giving it enforce payment against the client's representatives.(10)

Set-off of costs.—O. XX. r. 6 enacts that: "The Court may direct that the costs payable to one party by the other shall be set-off against the sum which is admitted or found to be due from the former to the latter." This rule, which is a re-enactment of sect. 221 of the last Code, is one of those sections in which the general equitable principle of set-off is recognized. See notes to O. VIII. r. 6, post. A mortgagor is entitled to set off or deduct the amount of costs payable to him under the decree against or from the mortgage debt payable by him.(11) The section has been applied by analogy to the deduction of costs from the purchase-money in pre-emption suits.(1) A set-off cannot be allowed for costs not actually awarded, and a decree which is incapable of being enforced cannot be set off against a decree which is alive.(2)

Interest on costs.—Interest cannot be allowed on costs where the decree itself is silent on the point, unless submission is made by the parties to the discretion of the Court.(3) The view once taken that sect. 222 and sect. 209 of the last Code did not affect the special provisions as to allowance of interest in the Transfer of Property Act (4) has been dissented from and overruled.(5).

Appeal as to costs.—It was proposed to enact in sect. 96, post, that: "No appeal shall lie on a matter of costs only where by law such costs are left to the discretion of the Court, except by leave of the Appellate Court, obtained on an application accompanied by a memorandum of appeal." As, however, objection was taken, the clause has been omitted, with the result that the matter is still regulated by the previous case-law. Under the Code of 1859 it was held that a regular appeal would lie on a mere question of costs, although as the lower Court had a discretion in the matter, any interference with its order ought also to be exercised with discretion. Though, however, an improper exercise of discretion might be matter of regular appeal, no special appeal would lie unless the award of costs was contrary to law.(6) A similar rule was laid down (7) under the Code of 1877. Under the last Code first appeals were given not merely from decrees but also from any part of the decrees,(8) and necessarily therefore against the part of the decree awarding costs. But such an award was then, as before, a matter of discretion, and the Court of Appeal would generally only interfere where a matter of principle was involved,(1) whether in first appeal from a decree (2) or order,(3) or in second appeal.(4) The Court has also held its interference justifiable in first appeal where, though strictly speaking no question of principle is involved, there has either been misapprehension as to facts or no real exercise of discretion at all.(5)

The Bombay High Court,(6) citing certain English decisions, has held that the principle to be deduced from them is that Appeal Courts should interfere with the exercise of discretion by the lower Courts as to costs when there has been any violation of any established principle,(7) misapprehension of facts,(8) or where there has been no real exercise of discretion at all.(9) These principles will be of general application in first appeals and appeals from orders. In the case of second appeals it must be shown that the order complained of comes within the provisions of sect. 100.

PART II.

EXECUTION.

GENERAL.

36. The provisions of this Code relating to the execution of decrees shall, so far as they are applicable, be deemed to apply to the execution of orders.

Application to orders.

Orders.—This section replaces and supersedes the first paragraph of sect. 649 of the last Code, the second paragraph being incorporated in the next section. By virtue of sect. 647 (now 141) and sect. 649 of the Code of 1882, it was held that an order obtained from a Judge in Chambers by an attorney against his client for payment of costs might be executed under Chapter XIX. of the Code of 1882, corresponding with the present Part.(1) By virtue of sect. 649 of the last Code, execution might have been had of a judgment entered up under sect. 86 of the Insolvent Act.(2)

Execution.—Execution is the enforcement by process of Court of its decrees and orders. The words "execution of decrees" at the head of the Chapter in the last Code was held to mean the enforcement of the decrees of Courts by process of execution only, viz. the different kind of execution dealt with in the Chapter for compelling the judgment-debtor to obey the order of the Court.(3) Process in execution must always be granted by the direct act of the Court itself. And as parties cannot invoke the process de novo either by agreement or by their conduct, so neither can they extend the relief which the Court has chosen to award.(4) Primâ facie it is the right of every litigant to call on the Courts to take such action as may be requisite to secure the execution of a decree containing a direction in his favour, and the Court of execution cannot impose terms which are not in the decree.(5) Procedure in execution ought not to be conducted in a slipshod and slovenly fashion, as if it were an unimportant branch of the work they have to do in the administration of justice, but it ought to be conducted with as much care as the procedure in suits because of the difficulties which so frequently arise. The Courts are bound to look to the Code for the procedure they should follow in these execution proceedings.(1)

"Provisions of this Code."—This Part, together with O. XXI., replaces Chapter XIX. of the Code of 1882. The provisions relating to execution have been divided into two portions, viz. those contained in the present Part, and those contained in the Rules of O. XXI., which must be read with it. These Rules refer to minor points of procedure. The arrangement and numbering of this Part has been very materially altered, and sections appearing in it have been taken from other portions of the old Code. Further, the sections of the Code reproduced have been added to, and made the subject of important amendments, which, for the most part, embody or have been suggested by previous case law. A considerable number of the sections or portions of the sections are entirely new.

Firstly, the Code is declared applicable to decrees and orders, and a definition given of the term "Court which passed the decree" (sects. 36, 37) [transfers of decrees to the Collectors for execution are dealt with in sects. 68–72 and the Third Schedule]. Then follow provisions relating to the Courts by which decrees may be executed, and the jurisdiction of such Courts (sects. 38–46); thirdly, the questions to be determined by those Courts (sect. 47, formerly 244); fourthly, the limit of time for execution (sect. 48); fifthly and sixthly, transferees, legal representatives, and procedure in execution respectively (sects. 49–54); seventhly, the mode of execution, whether by arrest, attachment, or sale (sects. 55–72); eighthly, payment and distribution of assets (sect. 75); and lastly, the resistance to execution (sect. 74). Other provisions concerning these matters are contained in the 103 rules of O. XXI.

The main alterations to be noted in the sections are as follows: the introduction of precepts (sect. 46), and of sects. 53, 61, and amendments of sect. 244 (now sect. 47), and of the sections corresponding with sects. 51, 55 (1) (2), 62, 64, 73. As regards sects. 68 et seq., dealing with execution by Collectors, the provisions, as they deal with a special matter, and are not of general application, have been placed in the Third Schedule.

The alterations in the rules are cited under O. XXI.

The chief omissions in the sections are of clauses (a) and (b) of the former sect. 244 (see notes to sect. 47) and of sect. 288 of the last Code, which it was considered might be omitted, having regard to the provisions of Act XVIII. of 1850. Sect. 257A of the last Code has also been omitted. It was first enacted by Act XII. of 1879, with a view to protect the interests of judgment-debtors against undue pressure by decree-holders. The Select Committee stated that the section had given rise to conflicting decisions, and, as interpreted by the majority of the High Courts, was found in practice to be of little service to judgment-debtors. Moreover, sect. 16 of the Indian

Contract Act, as amended, was considered to afford adequate protection where it is required. As, however, the section remains in force until the coming into operation of the present Code, and some cases decided under it have a relation to sect. 258 (now O. XXI. r. 2), the following notes on the section are given.

Object of section 257A of last Code, now omitted.—The Legislature considered that the power of executing a decree placed the holder of it in a position to exercise undue pressure over the judgment-debtor and enabled him to obtain terms too favourable to himself from the latter, whose interests needed protection at the hands of the Court which passed the decree.(1) The object is to avoid inconvenience and delay in executing the decree and its being held in terrorem over the debtor, and to afford protection against unfair arrangements, which protection is insured by the necessity for sanction.(2)

"The Court."—It was held under the last Code that the Court to which a decree had been transferred for execution could not pass an order under this section and that sanction could be given only by the Court which passed the decree.(3)

"Shall be void."—Under the last Code an agreement of the nature stated was declared to be void, and a question arose whether it was void in toto and for all purposes or for the purposes of execution proceedings only, and was enforceable by a fresh suit.(4) It is not easy to reconcile all the decisions on the point. There is no absolute prohibition against such an agreement. The section, however, forbids the enforcement of an agreement entered into in contravention of the section, while a decree is subsisting and enforceable. If that be so, then the decree must be enforced by execution and not by separate suit, and in such execution an unsanctioned agreement will not be recognized. If, however, an agreement is such that it adjusts and puts an end to the decree, which thus ceases to be enforceable, no question of or in execution arises, and the substituted agreement may be made the subject of a fresh suit.(5)

"Every agreement."—The agreement referred to to give time is an agreement to pay the judgment-debt with a stipulation that it shall not be payable at the time when under the decree it became payable. An agreement to give time for the satisfaction of a judgment implies ex vi termini that there has been no actual satisfaction but merely a stipulation for future satisfaction. Therefore an agreement under which there is an actual and present satisfaction of the judgment replacing it and putting an end to the decree is not within the section. In other words, the agreement to which the section relates is one which suspends and does not destroy the rights of execution consequent on the decree.(1) The last clause presupposes the existence of a judgment-debt, for the sum paid cannot be applied in satisfaction unless there is a subsisting judgment to which it can be applied. Where the judgment-debt is extinguished in whole or in part by the substitution for it of a contract, such a contract cannot be regarded as an agreement to give time for the satisfaction of a judgment-debt, since the latter, to the extent to which it has been extinguished, is no longer in existence. The agreement in such a case is only an adjustment of the decree under O. XXI. r. 2, which, if not certified, will not prevent execution.(2) An agreement may be good in one part and bad as regards another,(3) and what is valid will be upheld, provided that the stipulations are not part and parcel of one and the same agreement and can be separated one from the other.(4) The section did not apply to agreements by persons who are not parties to the suit in which the original decree was made.(5) Persons who have nothing to do with a decree cannot fall within the mischief struck at by the section. But the same consideration cannot apply where a person is substantially bound by the decree though not pro forma a party to it.(6) It was held that an agreement was none the less void because one of the parties to it, who was the legal representative of one of the judgment-debtors, had not been one of the parties to the suit in which the decree was obtained.(7)

(5) See cases cited in last note. In Govind Krishna v. Sakharam, 28 B. 383 (1904), these cases were not referred to. In Venkata Subramania Ayyar v. Koran Kannan Ahmed, 26 M. 19 (1902), at p. 26 it was pointed out that in Hukum Chand Aswal v. Taharunnissa Bibi, 16 C. 504 (1889), there was no agreement by the judgment-creditor to surrender his rights under the decree, and that being so, the case was, upon the principles above stated, wrongly decided.

Enforceable.—It was held under the last Code that the section must be deemed to relate to judgment-debts which are still enforceable.(8)

"Sanction."—Where no formal sanction had been recorded it was held that under the circumstances sufficient had been done to satisfy the requirements of the section.(1) As regards time for sanction, see below.(2) and as to the effect of want of sanction, see ante. The new agreement, when sanctioned, became part of the decree and could be executed as the decree in the case.(3) The parties could not resile from the agreement so sanctioned, and if there was irregularity in the sanction not amounting to want of jurisdiction, the compromise must take effect until the order sanctioning it is set aside.(4) An order passed under this section being one relating to the execution of the decree was appealable.(5)

"Decree. Order."—For the meaning of these terms, see note to sect. 2, ante.

What decree may be executed.—The rule may shortly be stated to be—the decree of the Court of first instance until appeal, and after that the decree of the Court of last instance. Whether the decree of the appellate Court is for reversing or for affirming the decree against which the appeal is preferred, it is, in either case, the final decree in the cause, and, as such, the only decree which is capable of being enforced by execution after it is once pronounced. If the decree of the lower Court is reversed it is absolutely dead and gone; if it is affirmed or modified it is equally so, though in a different way, namely, by being merged in the decree of the superior Court, which takes its place for all intents and purposes.(6) If it is altered by the Court of first instance, execution cannot issue.(7) But where the appellate decree is not complete in itself, reference may be made to the prior decree.(1) The decree, however, which is executed is the appellate decree. Where a decree was compromised by agreement made by the parties and communicated to the Court which passed the decree, held that the effect of the decree was extinguished by the agreement, which could only be enforced by a fresh suit and not by an application for execution of the former decree.(2) When a decree contains a direction for payment and creates a charge and default is made, the decree cannot be at once executed; the proper course for its enforcement is not to apply for execution, but to apply for either an order for an account and sale or to institute a suit for enforcing the charge.(3)

From which Court execution may be had.—See the notes to sects. 37, 38, 68–72, and Third Schedule. The general jurisdiction of such Courts is dealt with post. Sects. 43, 44, 45 deal with execution of decrees passed by British Courts either in places to which this Part does not extend, such as those scheduled districts to which the Code, or this portion of it has not been extended; execution of decrees passed by Courts of Native States, and issue of precepts to certain British Courts in foreign territory. The Courts, therefore, by which execution may be given, are Courts in British India executing either their own decrees or the decrees of other Courts in British India, or Courts in British India executing the decrees of British Courts in foreign territory (sect. 43), or Native Courts of such territory (sect. 44). There remains the question of execution of decrees of British Indian Courts out of British Indian territory. As regards this, the general principle is that Courts of British India have no authority to send their decrees for execution to Courts not in British India.(4) An exception to this rule exists (sect. 45) in the case of British Courts in foreign territory, provided that such execution is authorized under the notification of the Governor-general.(5)

Jurisdiction of Court executing decree.—The following section was proposed as regards this matter:—

"(1) Save for the purpose of rateably distributing assets realized by sale or otherwise in execution of a decree by a Court of competent jurisdiction, no Court shall execute a decree which, by reason of the value or the nature of the suit at the time of its institution, it would have been incompetent to pass.

a mortgage or charge against immoveable property included therein or subject thereto, shall have power to order the sale of any such immoveable property, wherever the same may be situate.

(3) Where, after the passing of a decree in a suit for the enforcement of a mortgage or charge, the whole of the immoveable property included therein or subject thereto falls, by transfer of jurisdiction, within the local limits of the jurisdiction of another Court, the decree may be executed either by the Court which passed the decree, or by the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the immoveable property falls by such transfer.

(4) Save as provided by this section and section 158 [dealing with attachment of salary] no Court shall have power to execute a decree in which the subject-matter of the suit or application for execution is property situate entirely outside the local limits of its jurisdiction.

(5) Where immoveable property attached in execution of a decree for the payment of money forms one estate comprised within the local limits of the jurisdiction of two or more Courts, any one of such Courts may order the sale of the entire estate upon such conditions as it may consider reasonable and necessary for the prevention of conflict of orders.

Explanation.—For the purposes of this section, a Court, which would have been competent to pass the decree, shall not be deemed to be incompetent to execute it merely because, by reason of the amount of rent or mesne profits ascertained for a period subsequent to the institution of the suit, the pecuniary limits of the jurisdiction of such Court are exceeded."

This section would have cleared up several points which have been the subject of judicial decision. The Court executing the decree referred to is, as appears from sect. 38, either the Court which passed the decree or the Court to which it is sent for execution. Clause (5) with some modifications has been embodied in O. XXI. r. 3. The other clauses have not been enacted; as, however, they have reference to preceding case-law, they are here reproduced and commented upon.

Clause (1).—There has been a conflict of decision on the question whether the Court executing a transferred decree was restricted to the pecuniary limits of its jurisdiction.(1) An application for the execution of a decree, however, is an application in the suit in which the decree was obtained, and questions arising in the execution of decrees are frequently as important as the questions in issue in the suit. The proposed clause adopted the principle of those decisions which held that a Court had no jurisdiction to execute a decree sent to it when the decree had been passed in a suit, the value or subject-matter of which was in excess of the pecuniary limits of its ordinary jurisdiction, and that the power to send a decree to "another Court" meant another Court having jurisdiction, and competent to execute that decree, having regard to the amount or value of the subject-matter of its ordinary jurisdiction. The words "at the time of its institution" were introduced to declare beyond doubt that a Court having jurisdiction to grant a decree has also authority to execute it, even though the pecuniary limits of its jurisdiction may be subsequently exceeded by the operation of incidental causes, such as a rise in the value of property or the gradual accumulation of interest.(1) With this Clause should be read the Explanation, which was intended to give effect to the undermentioned decision.(2) This Explanation was confined to cases of rent or mesne profits, but, as stated, the principle is one of general application, and has been applied in cases of interest also.

Clauses (2) and (3).—These both refer to suits on mortgages and charges, and form an exception to the general principle enacted in the fourth Clause of the proposed section. They embody the result of the decisions noted (3), in which it was held that it would be impossible, to apply the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act relating to sales in accordance with the decree passed in a suit on a mortgage if it were necessary to apply to different Courts to obtain realization of the mortgaged debt by sale of the properties hypothecated. It was, however, pointed out that the Court passing the decree is not alone competent, for in some cases it might be more convenient that sales of various lots mortgaged should be held in the Districts in which they are situate.(4) Moreover, a sale under a mortgage decree is not in its proper sense a sale in execution, being a sale directed by the decree itself.(5)

Clause (4).—If at the time a suit is brought a Court has no territorial jurisdiction over the subject-matter, then it has no jurisdiction to execute such decree. Sect. 16 indicates that the object of the Code is to limit the territorial jurisdiction of the Courts in regard to the property they are entitled to deal with, and as execution is only a continuation of the suit, a Court in the later stages of a suit has no greater powers than it possessed at its institution. Moreover (and this applies to all cases whether the decree is that of the Court executing it or not), territorial jurisdiction is a condition precedent to a Court executing a decree.(1)

Clause (5).—This is a provision inserted for convenience, it being obviously undesirable in many cases, and in others not practicable, that an entire estate should be sold otherwise than as a whole.(2) An estate forming one revenue-paying unit, but extending over more than one District, may be regarded as situate in the District where the whole revenue is paid or where the Court holding the sale has jurisdiction. This clause therefore forms another exception to the general principle upon which the fourth clause is based, in so far as authority is given to sell beyond local limits in execution of a simple money decree,(3) which authority may be exercised upon reasonable conditions by any Court of competent pecuniary jurisdiction within which any portion of the estate is situated. With some verbal alterations and the omission of the words "attached in execution of a decree for the payment of money" this clause has been retained and appears as O. XXI. r. 3.

Who may apply for execution.—A decree-holder or his representative, a joint decree-holder or his representative (O. XXI. r. 15), and the transferee of either of such decree-holders, where the transfer is by an assignment in writing or by operation of law (sect. 49, O. XXI. r. 16) only, for the position of an assignee of a decree under an oral assignment is not recognized.(4) The application may be in person or by recognized agent or pleader (O. III. r. 1).(5) Under O. I. r. 12 each of several plaintiffs or defendants may authorize any other to appear and act for him.(6) In the case of execution by a representative of a deceased decree-holder, see sect. 4 of the Succession Certificate Act (VII. of 1889).(7)

Definition of Court which passed a decree.

(a) where the decree to be executed has been passed in the exercise of appellate jurisdiction, the Court of first instance, and

(b) where the Court of first instance has ceased to exist or to have jurisdiction to execute it, the Court which, if the suit wherein the decree was passed was instituted at the time of making the application for the execution of the decree, would have jurisdiction to try such suit.

"Include."—This section corresponds with the second paragraph of sect. 649 of the last Code as amended by Act XII. of 1879, which explained the meaning of the expression the "Court which passed the decree." This does not exclude the Court which originally passed the decree as being a Court in which an application for execution should be made, but merely includes another Court.(1) In clause (a) the expression "Court of first instance" has been substituted for "Court which passed the decree from which the appeal was preferred;" the reason being that, as a matter of practice, the Court of intermediate appeal never executes a decree passed on second appeal. The meaning of the words "ceased to exist or to have jurisdiction to execute it" are explained in the under-mentioned cases.(2) The terms of clause (b) are general and draw no distinction as to the nature of the cause which puts an end to the jurisdiction.(3) It was held under the last Code that the Court to which a decree was transferred for execution, if it had ceased to have territorial jurisdiction, might either of its own motion, or when applied to under sect. 223 of that Code, transfer it for execution to the Court which had territorial jurisdiction;(4) and that a comparison of that section with the last paragraph of section 649, corresponding with this section, indicated that territorial jurisdiction is a condition precedent to a Court executing a decree.(5) This is so now.

COURTS BY WHICH DECREES MAY BE EXECUTED.

Court by which decree may be executed.

38. A decree may be executed either by the Court which passed it, or by the Court to which it is sent for execution. [s. 223 first para.

Courts of Execution.—Under sect. 223 of the last Code also a decree might have been executed either by the Court which passed it or by the Court to which it was transferred for execution under the circumstances mentioned in that section by the former Court. According to this procedure, the Court which passed the decree was after transfer virtually deprived of control until the decree was returned, and to all intents and purposes execution was everywhere in suspense except in the particular Court which happened to have the decree on its file. The Court to which the decree was transferred had seizin of the execution proceedings, and carried them on until as far as possible execution was obtained. The decree might then have been transferred to another Court, and the process repeated until full execution was had. Though the legality of concurrent execution has been recognized,(1) both under the Codes of 1859 and 1877, as well as that of 1882, in practice it was not generally carried out. The Court to which the decree was transferred could not, after executing it as far as it could, transfer it directly to a third Court. It had to send it back to the Court which passed the decree, which might then transfer it to a third Court, a procedure which was cumbersome and caused delay.(2) It was at first considered in Committee that the results of the transfer system, which seriously affected the chances of realization and added greatly to the expenses eventually to be borne by the judgment-debtor, were not justified by any compensating advantage. Excess in realization, which the former system was primarily introduced to prevent, could, they considered, be quite as effectively obviated by reserving the power of ordering attachment or sale to the Court which passed the decree and which would not issue a precept for either of these purposes unless, looking to the amount of assets obtained from all sources, it considered such action to be necessary. Special limitations were later placed on this power. It was proposed that the Court which passed a decree should be responsible throughout for seeing it enforced, and the Court to which the precept was issued should have jurisdiction only to entertain objections not affecting the legality or propriety of the precept or the right to execute the decree. It was thus proposed to effect an important simplification of procedure by substituting execution by precept for the former procedure by transfer of the decree. This would have involved two results, viz., firstly, concurrent execution as opposed to the former practice under which there was only one Court at one time carrying out the execution of a decree; and, secondly, execution by one Court (that to which the precept is given) under the direction of another Court (or that which passed the decree) as opposed to the former practice under which the Court in which the execution proceedings were pending had control of them. The Court passing the decree might thus have executed the decree itself, and might at the same time have issued precepts to another Court or to two or more Courts directing simultaneous execution of the decree. The conduct of the execution would have remained in the hands of the Court passing the decree, which might from time to time give such directions as it thought fit regarding the execution to the Court to which the precept is issued, whose powers were stated and limited. The adoption of the precept system would of necessity have abolished the elaborate conditions of transfer embodied in sect. 223 of the last Code. The Select Committee, which, however, considered the Draft Bill immediately prior to its introduction, considered that the difficulties in the existing system arose not so much from the machinery of execution itself as from the defective manner in which it was worked. They therefore stated that they were unable to accept the proposal of the Committee of 1902 in relation to the execution of decrees by precept. They were, however, so far in accord with the view expressed by that Committee as to have been able to insert sect. 46, post, enabling the Court which passed the decree to issue a precept to any other Court to attach property of the judgment-debtor pending execution in the ordinary course. Beyond this they stated they felt they could not safely go. With this exception, therefore, the general system of execution, viz., by the Court passing the decree or by transfer has been maintained.

The section provides that a decree may be executed by the Court which passed it, and it was held that where a Court passed a decree for sale of property, and the place where such property was situate was transferred to the jurisdiction of another Court, the former Court might still execute the decree.(1) It has been held that the provisions of this section read with those of the next section plainly indicate that as a general rule (to which there are sundry exceptions) no Court can execute a decree in which the subject-matter of the suit or of the application for execution is property entirely outside its local jurisdiction.(2)

Transfer of decree.—As sect. 38 embodies the first paragraph of sect. 223 of the last Code, sect. 39 embodies the second and third paragraphs, sect. 41 the fourth paragraph, and O. XXI. rr. 4 and 5 the fifth and concluding paragraphs of that section. See notes to sects. 36–38, ante, and to the last-mentioned rules in O. XXI., post. To make the provisions relating to the transmission of decrees applicable, it is necessary that the provisions of the Code should regulate the procedure of both the Courts.(1) Where a decree has been transferred by a Court which passed it to another Court for execution, the original Court, it has been held, does not thereby completely lose all jurisdiction in respect of execution thereof.(2) As to orders sending certificates for execution under the Public Demands Recovery Act, see case cited.(3) Where in different districts different modes of execution are prescribed, and where the question is how a decree passed in one, but of which execution is sought in another of such districts, is to be executed, the executing Court must be guided by the rules in force in its own district.(4) It has been held under sect. 233 of the last Code that an application for transfer of decree is an application to take a step in aid of execution within the meaning of Art. 182 of the Limitation Act of 1908.(5)

Powers of Court in executing transferred decree.

42. The Court executing a decree sent to it shall have the same powers in executing such decree as if it has been passed by itself. All persons disobeying or obstructing the execution of the decree shall be punishable by such Court in the same manner as if it had passed the decree. And its order in executing such decree shall be subject to the same rules in respect of appeal as if the decree had been passed by itself.

Limitation of Powers.—The powers of a Court are subject to other sections of the Code, which may affect them. So the section corresponding to this in the Code of 1882 was held subject to the special provisions of the section corresponding to O. XXI. r. 16, post.(1) Under the Code of 1882, the Court to which the decree was sent was, by virtue of the provisions of sect. 225 (now O. XXI. r. 7), held entitled to enquire into the jurisdiction of the Court which passed the decree.(2) And if the Court to which the decree was sent held that there was no jurisdiction, then its hands were stayed and the parties had to go back to the Court which passed the decree, the Court to which the decree was sent having declined to become the executing Court within the meaning of sect. 228 of that Code, corresponding with the present section.(3) Under the Code of 1882 it was also held that where a decree was transferred, the Court to which the decree was sent was competent to determine whether execution of the decree was barred by limitation or not; (4) but not where a Court made an order for execution of the decree and then transmitted it.(5) It has been held that an order for the transmission of a decree for execution to another Court is not an order for the execution of the decree, nor is the application for the transmission an application for execution.(6)

As illustrations of the limitation on its powers, the following decisions under the earlier Codes may be referred to as being in force under this Code. The executing Court cannot question the validity of the decree or any portion of it. Its duty is to enforce it and not to determine whether it was illegal latter may object that the decree sought to be executed is not the decree of the Court to be executed.(1)

"Same powers."—While the functions of an executing Court are confined to effecting execution, and to matters arising out of the proceedings in execution: (2) and are subject to the limitations above mentioned, they are yet judicial and not merely ministerial functions.(3) So a Court to which a decree has been sent has power to make orders in execution of the decree, to deal with obstruction to execution, to investigate claims of third parties to attached property, and the like. It may generally be stated that the Court to which a decree is sent has the same power as those which were possessed by a Court to which a decree was transferred for execution under the Code of 1882.

Decrees of British Courts where provisions do not extend.—The first part of this section was enacted because formerly a decree obtained in a scheduled District to which the provisions of Chapter XIX. of the Code of 1882 had not been extended, could not be executed under the Code.(4) It was determined therefore to revert to the provisions of sect. 284 of the Code of 1859, which placed such decrees on a footing as regards execution with those obtained in a foreign Court.

Or in foreign territory.—The words "or continued" were introduced into the Code of 1882, by sect. 23 of Act VII. of 1888. Applicants under this section must show that the Court passing the decree is one or other of the Courts referred to in this section.(5)

"May be executed."—This section, it was held, did not remove the decree of a Native State falling within its purview from the category of foreign judgments. A Court in British India, though it may, is not bound to, execute the foreign decree, and will not do so if it is shown to have been without jurisdiction or obtained by fraud.(1) The judgment of a foreign Court on a decree obtained in British India is no bar to the execution of the original decree.(2) As to foreign judgments generally, see sects. 11-13, ante; proof (3) and execution (4) of foreign decrees, cases cited.

Execution of decrees in foreign territory.—This section was inserted in the Code of 1882 by sect. 24, Act VII. of 1888. The tributary Mahals of Orissa do not form part of British India, and therefore in the absence of a prior notification in the India Gazette as specified in this section, it was held that no decree by a Court in British India could be sent for execution into a territory such as Mayoorbhunj which is a tributary Mahal.(5) An instance of a Court "established or continued" within the meaning of this section is the Court of the Political Agent at Sikkim.(6) the property in the manner prescribed in regard to the attachment of property in execution of a decree:

Provided that no attachment under a precept shall continue for more than two months unless the period of attachment is extended by an order of the Court which passed the decree or unless before the determination of such attachment the decree has been transferred to the Court by which the attachment has been made and the decree-holder has applied for an order for the sale of such property.

Precepts.—See as to this section the notes to sect. 38, ante. As regards this section the Report of the Select Committee states:—"Though a system of execution based on precepts is, in the opinion of the Committee, open to grave objection, they think the idea may be utilized for the purpose of enabling a decree-holder to obtain an interim attachment when there is ground to apprehend that he may otherwise be deprived of the fruits of his decree. They have for this purpose introduced clause 46 into the Bill. They think it expedient to fix a time limit for the continuance of this interim attachment, but at the same time they have empowered the Court to extend the period to meet the exigencies of particular cases. After careful consideration they have come to the conclusion that notwithstanding attachment under a precept, re-attachment on the ordinary application for execution will still be necessary. Though at first sight it may appear a better course to provide that re-attachment shall not be necessary when the issue of a precept is followed by the ordinary application for execution, after careful consideration they have come to the conclusion that it will be safer to require re-attachment, having regard to the agency by which execution is carried into effect." The section, therefore, originally contained a third clause as follows:—"Notwithstanding anything contained in this section, it shall be incumbent on the decree-holder to apply for execution as though no precept had been issued." This, however, was later in Council struck out.

Appendix E No. 1 gives form of certificate of result of proceedings in precepts.

QUESTIONS TO BE DETERMINED BY COURT EXECUTING DECREE.

[s. 244.] 47. (1) All questions arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed, or their representatives, and relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree, shall be determined by the Court executing the decree and not by a separate suit.

Questions to be determined by the Court executing decree.

(2) The Court may, subject to any objection as to limitation or jurisdiction, treat a proceeding under this section as a suit or a suit as a proceeding and may, if necessary, order payment of any additional court-fees.

(3) Where a question arises as to whether any person is or is not the representative of a party, such question shall, for the purposes of this section, be determined by the Court.

Explanation.—For the purposes of this section, a plaintiff whose suit has been dismissed and a defendant against whom a suit has been dismissed, are parties to the suit.

History and Scope of Section.—The provisions of this important section are designed to prevent multiplicity of suits and to secure that all matters which can be decided in the suit should be so decided. The subject-matter has been repeatedly considered both by the Legislature since it was first statutorily dealt with in sect. 11, Act XXIII. of 1861, amending the Code of 1859, as also by the Courts, which have given numerous and often conflicting decisions on points which have arisen with reference to it. The tendency both of the Legislature and, on the whole, of the Courts has been to enlarge as much as possible the scope of the proceedings before Courts charged with the execution of the decree. With this view the statutory law has been amended from time to time. Sect. 11 of Act XXIII. of 1861, which referred expressly only to parties and not representatives, and not to discharge, satisfaction or stay, ran as follows :— [s. 224.]

"All questions regarding the amount of any mesne profits which by the terms of the decree may have been reserved for adjustment in the execution of the decree, or of any mesne profits or interest which may be payable in respect of the subject-matter of a suit between the date of the institution of the suit and execution of the decree, as well as questions relating to sums alleged to have been paid in discharge or satisfaction of the decree or the like, and any other questions arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed and relating to the execution of the decree, shall be determined by order of the Court executing the decree and not by separate suit, and the order passed by the Court shall be open to appeal."

This enactment was followed by the Code of 1877 (Act X.). This Code expressly referred to representatives, and was in its terms the same as those of the Code of 1882, as the latter was first published, except that the words "discharge" and "satisfaction" appeared for the first time in the Code of 1882 (Act XIV.). The latter Code was amended by Act VII. of 1888. Sect. 26 of that amending Act substituted a new clause (c) for that which appeared in sect. 244 of that Code prior to this amendment. The amended clause (c) included cases of stay of execution as to which there had been some difference of opinion whether, as suspending execution, it was a matter relating to execution. Act VII. of 1888 also added the last clause of sect. 244 of the former Code which corresponds with subsection (3) of the present Code, though the latter has been amended.

It will be observed that the present Code effects several amendments. In the first place clause (a) of sect. 244 of the last Code has not been re-enacted. That clause ran : (a) "questions regarding the amount of any mesne profits as to which the decree has directed inquiry." All reference to mesne profits has now been omitted. This omission is due to the recognition of the principle that inquiries into the amount of mesne profits are properly not a matter for the execution department, but should be treated as an integral part of the suit, for the duties of execution do not properly arise until the amount of mesne profits has been ascertained and the successful party is in a position to apply to the Court with all the necessary formalities in order to realize the sum as though it were the subject of a decree for the payment of money. Under the former Code the Court might under sect. 212 of that Code have passed a decree for the property and directed an inquiry into the amount of mesne profits accrued due prior to the suit, which under clause (a) of sect. 244 might have been determined by the Court executing the decree, and under clause (b) of that section the Court of execution might also determine questions regarding the amount of mesne profits accruing after the institution of the suit as allowed by sect. 211. Now the ascertainment of the mesne profits no longer forms part of the proceedings in execution, but is a part of the suit itself. Under O. XX. r. 12 of the present Code the Court, in the case of mesne profits accruing before the suit, may either determine the amount in the decree or pass a preliminary decree for possession only. In the case of mesne profits accruing after the suit, it may pass such a preliminary decree. Whenever it passes a preliminary decree the Court must then, in continuation of the suit, inquire as to mesne profits and dispose of the same by a final decree which is then capable of execution.

On the same principle, viz. that questions regarding the amount of both mesne profits and interest should be determined by the decree and not in execution clause (b) of the former section has been omitted.

The reference to stay of execution has been omitted, but this is a matter clearly coming within the words "all questions," etc.

The third sub-section has been redrafted, and the Legislature has made it compulsory on the Court to determine questions arising as to representation of parties. It was considered inexpedient that separate suits should be instituted for the decision of such questions, as the delay and expense were often very great and resulted in the needless protraction of litigation.

The second sub-section and the explanation are new. The first sanctions an existing practice and the latter is intended to end a conflict of judicial decisions. See as to these, post.

There are several other matters which have been the subject of conflicting judicial decisions, but these have not been dealt with and are commented upon, post.

The object of this section is that the Court having the parties before it in the suit, it is proper that all questions between them relating to the execution of the decree should be determined and there should not be the expense of separate suits to determine such questions. The most liberal interpretation, therefore, ought to be given to the provisions of this section in order to carry out what was the design of the Legislature.(1) The section has been framed so as to prohibit in a separate suit any relief being granted which shall interfere with the conduct of the execution proceedings by the Court executing the decree.(2) The Privy Council speaking of sect. 11 of Act XXIII. of 1861 said, "This enactment was undoubtedly passed for the beneficial purpose of checking needless litigation, and their Lordships do not desire to limit its operation." (1) And again, under the last Code, the Judicial Committee stated that it was of the utmost importance that all objections to execution should be disposed of as cheaply and as speedily as possible, and that they were glad to find that the Courts in India had not placed any narrow construction on the language of sect. 244 of that Code; (2) and in accordance with that decision it has been repeatedly held that a wide and liberal construction should be placed on the section so as not to drive parties to an independent suit, unless the case be clearly outside the scope and purview of the section, so that all questions which can possibly be determined in the execution proceedings should be so determined.(3) It has been recently held that the expression "parties to the suit" imports "between parties opposed to each other in the suit," but does not necessarily mean between parties who are plaintiff and defendant respectively: in a partition suit parties who are co-defendants are often opposed to each other.(4)

The provisions of this section relate not only to proceedings initiated by the decree-holder, but also to applications made by the judgment-debtors.(5) The section does not apply as a bar to an adjudication of a question raised by a party not seeking such adjudication as a plaintiff, but resisting the plaintiff's claim as a defendant.(6) When a Court passes an order under this section it is not necessary to draw up a decree.(7) This section does not affect the jurisdiction of the Court but only prescribes the form of procedure.(8)

As to the applicability of this section in cases under the Public Demands Recovery Act, a matter which appears to be in an unsettled state, and to Agency Tracts in Madras,(9) see cases noted below.(10)

"All questions," etc.—As already stated, the section should receive a liberal construction. This has been further emphasized by the introduction of the word "all." This section, however, applies only to questions relating to execution, etc., of a decree which is unchallenged. It presupposes the existence of a decree which is validly susceptible of execution. Cases can only be inquired into under it where the execution of a decree which is susceptible and capable of execution is conceded, and it does not apply to a case where the object is to impugn the decree itself or to set up a case inconsistent with the decree which it is sought to execute,(1) as where fraud affecting the decree is alleged,(2) or an agreement previous to the decree that it was not to be executed,(3) or the judgment-debtor tries to set aside the effect of a decree.(4) The validity of a decree of which execution is sought cannot be disputed in proceedings under this section, the power given to stay execution referring to the stay of execution of valid decrees.(5) The scope of the section is limited to questions arising in the enforcement of an existing decree capable of execution on the application of one or other of the parties to it.(6) This section presupposes that the questions with which it deals are such as can be finally determined in the execution proceedings. If they cannot, it has no application.(7) The section applies as well to a dispute arising after the decree has been executed as to disputes before that event.(8) But the questions must be such as have reference to matters arising subsequent to the passing of the decree and not antecedent to it.(9) Where, however, the decree has been fully satisfied and the execution proceedings closed, no order can be passed under this section and a separate suit will lie; (10) and a question is not within this section which did not arise at all until the decree ceased to exist.(11) It has recently been held that the answer to the question whether an order in execution-proceedings is is anything due on it; (1) questions as to part satisfaction of a decree.(2) Suit by judgment-debtor against auction-purchaser to recover property sold in execution, on the ground that being a tenant's right it is not saleable.(3) When a prior mortgagee has been made a party in a puisne mortgagee's suit, and the puisne mortgagee has obtained a decree for sale on his mortgage, the prior mortgagee can have his rights settled in execution-proceedings by an application under this section.(4)

A case is not within the section if it is a question which does not relate to, and is not directly connected with, the execution of the decree, even though between the same parties,(4) that is, if it is not a question in respect to the furtherance of or hindrance to, or the manner of carrying out, the execution of the decree; (5) or does not arise between the parties to the suit in which the order was passed; (6) or is a question which cannot be properly determined in execution; (7) or if it is an order not in execution, such as an interlocutory order pending suit appointing a commission to make partition subsequently to a preliminary decree,(8) or if it indirectly and remotely relates to the execution of the decree; (9) or the decree has been satisfied; (10) or if an order is made not in execution of decree but after execution and when such proceedings have come to an end; (11) or the question is one not under but outside the decree, such as assessment of damages for excessive execution,(12) or for damages for injury to property after it had vested in him on the confirmation of the sale.(13)

Fraud.—It was well settled law under sect. 244 of the last Code that when circumstances affecting the validity of a sale in execution had been brought about by the fraud of one of the parties to the suit or the auction-purchaser and gave rise to a question between these parties such as, apart from fraud, would be within the provisions of that section, a suit would not lie to impeach the validity of the sale on the ground of such fraud.(6)

This rule was, of course, subject to this, that the other conditions of the section existed, viz., that the question was one arising between the parties to the suit or their representatives. So it was held that as between a party to the suit and a stranger, the provisions of sect. 312 of the former Code did not debar the person aggrieved from instituting a suit, if he could establish that a material error in the sale had its origin not in mere irregularity but in fraud.(1) So also in the under-mentioned case,(2) while the suit was held to be barred as regards those plaintiffs who were parties to the suit the sale in which was sought to be set aside, it was held to lie at the instance of the other plaintiffs who had been no parties to such suit.

It was held that when a decree or purchase was made benami, sect. 244 did not apply, and a suit would lie, as the section could not be applied on the footing that the persons really interested were parties to the proceeding (3) and that the auction-purchaser could not be regarded as a party to the suit.(4) Though this case was not referred to, it must be taken on this latter point to have been overruled (5) by the decision of the Privy Council, that when a question relating to execution has arisen between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed, the fact that the purchaser, who is not party to the suit, is interested in the result is not a bar to the application of the section.(6) A judgment-debtor was held entitled by an application under sect. 244 to have an execution sale of his properties set aside if he alleged and proved fraud on the part of the decree-holder, though no fraud was alleged or proved against the auction-purchaser, who was a stranger to the suit. The auction-purchaser was of course entitled to have the purchase-money paid by him refunded by the decree-holder. When during the pendency of an application under sect. 244 to set aside a sale the sale is confirmed, such confirmation was held to be no bar to the maintenance of the application even though the auction-purchaser was a stranger to the suit.(7)

R. 260 (1875) [in which it was held that however fraudulent the conduct of a plaintiff in a suit may be, if the purchaser is not implicated in the fraud the validity of the sale is not affected; but pointing out that the different rule holds good where not only the decree but the auction-proceedings are fraudulent].

An application to set aside a sale on the ground of fraud may be made even after the sale has been confirmed.(1)

Where a judgment-debtor applies to have an execution-sale set aside and alleges circumstances which, if found in his favour, would amount to fraud on the part of the decree-holder or auction-purchaser the application was held to come under sect. 244, something more being alleged than a material irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale within the meaning of sect. 311 of the last Code.(2) But a mere allegation of fraud without any attempt to substantiate it was insufficient.(3)

In order, however, to determine whether a case in which fraud is alleged comes within this section or may be made the subject of a separate suit, it is necessary, apart from any other conditions annexed to the section, to ascertain whether it is the decree or the execution proceedings under the decree which are alleged to be fraudulent. Proceedings under this section presuppose the existence of a valid and binding decree.(4) The section was held not to apply to a case where the judgment-debtor tried to set aside the effect of a decree, but it referred to proceedings in execution based on the decree as if it were perfectly good and valid.(5) Under this section the questions to be decided in execution are questions relating to the execution, discharge, or satisfaction of the decree. A question whether the decree itself was obtained by fraud or collusion was held not to be one which relates to the execution, discharge, or satisfaction of the decree, but which affects its very subsistence and validity.(6) The question whether the decree sought to be executed was obtained by fraud

As to these two sections, see judgment of Ghose, J., in Mohendro Narain Chaturaj v. Gopal Mondul, F. B. 17 C. 769 (1890), in which the learned Judge was of opinion that an application to set aside a sale for fraud was not provided for in the Code either in s. 244 or 311, that the executing Court had, however, inherent power to set aside a sale before confirmation, but that after confirmation the Court of execution was functus officio, and that the matter could only be dealt with by separate suit. At one time it was not clearly understood that after a decree had been fully executed the Court could re-open the matter under s. 244 and set aside a sale already confirmed, but the law was subsequently settled as stated in the text, that an application lay under s. 244 whether before or after confirmation of the sale; see Jagan Nath Gorai v. Watson & Co., 19 C. 341 at p. 344 (1892), and the F. B. case cited. See also Golam Ahad Chowdhry v. Judhistir Chandra Saha, 7 C. W. N. 305 (1902); s. c., 30 C. 142.

(4) Ram Narain Tewari v. Shew Bhunjan Roy, 27 C. 197, 200 (1899), the terms valid and binding were here cited with reference to fraud. It has been held that where there was no subsisting decree the matter was yet within s. 244: Doyamoyi Dasi v. Sarat Chunder Mojumdar, 25 C. 175 (1897); also when the decree did not warrant a sale at all but provided for satisfaction out of money in Court: Jagan Nath Gorai v. Watson & Co., 19 C. 341, 344 (1892); also where it was contended in a mortgage-suit that there had been no decree absolute directing the sale: Siva Pershad Maity v. Nundo Lall Kar Mahapatra, 18 C. 139 (1890); Harihar Kanta v. Rama Pandu, 33 B. 698 (1909).

was thus held not to be within the scope of sect. 244 (1) and could only be raised by a separate suit.(2) When, therefore, both the decree and in consequence the sale thereunder were impeached on the ground of fraud, the remedy lay by separate suit.(3) But, as already stated, if the decree was not impeached for fraud but only the execution-proceedings thereunder, the question had to be raised in those proceedings and a separate suit would not lie. An objection, therefore, to a sale of property in execution of a decree on the ground of fraud is a question to be determined exclusively under this section, even though the purchaser was no party to the decree.

"Court executing the decree."—That is, either the Court which passed the decree or the Court to which the decree has been transferred. The provisions of this section govern the procedure of both such Courts.(4) The words must be interpreted to mean the Court executing the decree at the time when the application is made; and they do not include the Court which has executed the decree and has thereby become functus officio.(5) The section is limited to Courts executing the decree, and therefore an order refusing to stay execution by a Court which is not executing the decree is not appealable.(6)

"And not by separate suit."—A separate suit ought not to be instituted unless all questions between the parties or their representatives cannot be decided in the original suit,(7) and all questions which can possibly be determined in the execution proceedings should be so determined.(8) The existence, however, of a decree cannot bar a fresh suit between the parties in respect of rights which cannot be worked out without additions to the decree which the Court of execution has no power to make.(9)

It has been held that this section does not absolutely bar a suit, but prohibits in a separate suit between the same parties to a decree, any relief being granted which interferes with the conduct of the execution proceedings of the Court executing a decree.(1) In considering whether the scope of any suit comes within the section, regard must be had both to the cause of action and the relief claimed. Thus the question of an uncertified adjustment may be a matter relating to execution, and no suit is permissible which has as its object to restrain the execution of the decree on this ground; but it may be that a suit would lie for other relief which had as its subject-matter such uncertified adjustment.(2) Further, this section differs from sect. 11 which bars the trial of an issue. This section bars a suit brought for the determination of certain questions specified therein, but does not bar the trial of any issue involved in those questions if the issue is raised at the instance of a defendant in a suit brought against him.(3) Where the execution proceedings are closed, a separate suit will lie, as the section is then no longer applicable.(4)

"Arising."—It has been said (5) that this word should be read as "directly arising," otherwise the most remote enquiries would be possible in the execution department. Probably, however, it is best not to import words into the section and to determine in each case whether a question does arise which is dealt with by this section.

The following considerations establish that for the purposes of this section an objection made by a party to the decree or his representative against whom execution is applied for, to the effect that property is held by him by a right or title not rendering it liable to attachment in execution of such decree, is a question arising between the parties. The provision formerly in force corresponding to sect. 244, namely, sect. 11 of Act XXIII. of 1861, was limited in its operation to questions arising between parties to the suit, and the question arose whether the term "parties" applied to persons who had not been made parties before decree but against whom execution was sought as heirs of the judgment-debtor upon his death after decree. In the last Code the words "or their representatives" were added and applied to persons against whom, or against the property in whose hands, execution was sought, on the ground that they were the heirs of a judgment-debtor who has died after decree. As regards the kind of questions intended in sect. 244 of that Code, the matter was fairly clear from the provisions of sect. 234. Under that section (now 50) the representative could have been made liable "to the extent of the property of the deceased which has come to his hands and has not been duly disposed of." So that two kinds of property could be attached. First, property of the ancestor found in the hands of the heir; second, the property of the heir, from whatever source derived, to the extent to which he had wasted the assets that had descended to him without satisfying the debts of the deceased. Where property is said to be liable to execution in the hands of heirs as assets inherited from their ancestor, in such a case the question that ordinarily arises is, whether the property has so descended or not. That is a question in which the parties interested are the judgment-creditor on one side and the alleged heir himself on the other. The persons interested would be the same if the property against which execution was sought were the property of the heir himself which it was sought to charge on the ground of his having wasted the inherited assets. The provision in the former sect. 234 for taking an account made this plain.

An examination of the decisions led to the same result. The cases fell into two classes. The first class consisted of cases in which a person is originally made a party in a representative capacity, or is subsequently made a party in consequence of the death of an original party before decree. In this case it was clearly settled that such a person was a party to the suit within the meaning of sect. 244, and that a question between him and the decree-holder, as to whether property had come to him as the representative of the judgment-debtor, and so was liable to be taken in execution of the decree against him as such representative, or on the other hand belonged to himself alone and not in such representative character, was one that must be decided in the execution proceedings, and not by suit. The governing authority on the subject was the decision of the Privy Council in Chowdry Wahed Ali v. Jumace; (1) and it was followed and applied in the sense indicated in several subsequent cases in this country.(2) The second class of cases consisted of those in which the representatives had not been made parties to the suit before decree, but in which, in consequence of the death of the judgment-debtor after decree, a question arose as to the rights of the decree-holder to execute the decree against the representatives or the property said to have descended to them. Under Act XXIII. of 1861, it was held, both by the Madras (3) and Calcutta (4) High Courts, that representatives proceeded against in execution of a decree against the person they represented were parties to the suit within the meaning of the section corresponding to sect. 244 of the last Code. That question no longer arose under the Code of 1882, because in sect. 244 of that Code the representatives were expressly mentioned. In both of those cases and in a series of subsequent cases it was held in accordance with the analogy of the other class of decisions already mentioned, that questions arising between a decree-holder and the representatives of the judgment-debtor as to whether property had come to the representatives as such, and so was liable to be taken in execution, or was their own property derived from any other source, and therefore not so liable, must be decided in the execution-proceeding and not by suit.(5) There were other cases in which the decisions turned upon considerations which did not apply to the case mentioned. They were cases in which it was held that a claim either by the judgment-debtor or by his representatives to property attached in execution, made not in his own right but as a trustee,(1) did not fall within sect. 244 of the last Code.(2)

Two propositions were then established under the previous case-law: firstly, that where in execution of a decree for a debt due by a deceased person, property in the hands of his representative was attached, a claim by the representative to have the property released on the ground that it was his own private property fell not within sect. 278 of the last Code but within the section corresponding to this.(3) Secondly, however, if the judgment-debtor objected to attachment, not on the ground that the property was his private property but set up a jus tertii, namely, the right of third parties not before the Court as parties to the suit or their representatives, then the matter fell within sect. 278 of the last Code and not this section.(4) Thus where the judgment-debtor alleged that he was in possession only as shebait of a deity to whom the property had been dedicated, it was held that the case fell within sect. 278 read with sect. 280 of the last Code, and not within sect. 244 of that Code, now represented by this section.(5)

Questions arising between whom.—Questions may possibly arise between a party on one side and a party on the other side, or between a party on one side and the representative (i.e. heir, executor, administrator or transferee within the meaning of the term hereafter stated) of a party on the other side, or between representatives on both sides, or between a party or his representative on one side and the auction-purchaser or his representative on the other. It has been held that the section does not cover a question between a party to a suit and his representative.(1)

Parties.—This means parties to the suit and on the record.(2) It means parties who have properly been made parties in accordance with the provisions of the Code. Thus where a Mahomedan infant was represented by his father's brother (who has disqualified because his interest was adverse) it was held that the minor had never been a party.(3) Where a decree is passed against one who represents others, all persons whom he represents are parties, as in the case of a karnavan and members of the tarwad.(4) If the question arises between parties the section cannot be evaded by adding an unnecessary party to the suit.(5) A decree-holder does not cease to be a party by becoming a purchaser.(6) In a suit for partition a compromise was entered into by all the parties except S. and a decree obtained in the terms thereof. In execution S. was dispossessed, and presented a petition to the Court objecting that the decree was not binding on her. It was held that she was a party and entitled to appeal.(7) Defendants not joining in compromise on which decree was passed were held not to be judgment-debtors.(8) It was held that where a decree or purchase was made benami sect. 244 did not apply, it being said that it was not necessary to apply that section on the footing that the persons really interested were parties.(9) But this case, in so far at any rate as it held that the matter did not come within the section as far as the auction-purchaser was concerned, must be taken to have been overruled by the Privy Council.(10) It was held that the Collector, and, in proceedings relating to the enforcement of an order under sect. 412 of the said Code against a next friend, the latter, was not a party.(1) If the rights of parties are transferred before decree, and if the transferee is made a party to the suit before decree, then he comes within the words "parties to the suit."(2) A person who is sued in one suit in his personal capacity is in law a different person when suing in a subsequent suit in the capacity of shebait or trustee.(3) In a recent case it was held that where a judgment-debtor claimed property not in his personal capacity but as a mutwalli who was not a party to the suit, the case did not come under this section.(4)

The words "parties to the suit" are not now limited to judgment-creditors and judgment-debtors.(5) The case of rival decree-holders has been held not to be within the section,(6) nor a third party objecting to the sale of attached property; (7) nor is a person who becomes a surety for the appearance of a party himself a party to the suit.(8) In an order made under an application under O. XXXIII. r. 12 for payment under O. XXXIII. r. 10 or 11, Government is deemed to be a party to the suit, and such an order is therefore under this section and appealable.(9)

The Official Assignee is the representative of an insolvent debtor within the meaning of this section.(10) A Court has no jurisdiction in execution to reopen the question as to whether certain persons brought on the record as representatives of the deceased plaintiff, and as such made respondents in an appeal, had been properly joined as parties to the suit.(11)

"Representative."—This refers to all persons by or against whom the decree may be executed (see as to this notes to sect. 36, ante). The term used is not "legal representative" but "representative." The former term means an heir, devisee, executor, or administrator of a party, or more strictly the last two persons only.(1) But a person it was held might be representative within the meaning of this section who is not a legal representative in the sense stated.(2) The Courts in India did not confine the term to its primary meaning of executor or administrator, but have included heirs, executors before probate, persons in possession of property of the deceased (3) and persons taking joint property by survivorship.(4) A further extension was given to the term so as to include representatives in interest, such as assignees from a mortgagor of mortgaged property in proceedings for the execution of a decree against the mortgagor for sale of the mortgaged property.(5) It was held in an early case (6) under the Code of 1882 that the word "representative" meant only persons who succeeded to the rights of any of the parties to the suit after the decree was passed. In this case it was held that Run Bahadur was (a) not a legal representative as he inherited not from Ranee Asmedh Koer but from her husband; (7) (b) that he was not a representative under sect. 244 because the transfer to him was not after decree; (c) that he was not a party as the suit was dismissed as against him. This latter ground would not now be sustainable by reason of the Explanation. As regards the second ground, it is to be observed that the Ekrarnama referred to was not merely before decree but before the suit. It is, however, incorrect now to say that only those who take the interests of parties after decree are representatives. A person who is a transferee within the meaning of the cases cited is equally such whether the transfer took place pending the suit before decree or after decree.(8) There is no distinction between the position of legal representatives added to the suit before and those added after decree.(9) A person attaching decree is representative of decree-holder.(10)

not to be a representative of the judgment-debtor.(1) Where property was purchased subject to an attachment, but the decree under which the attachment was levied was subsequently set aside, it was held that the purchaser was not the representative of the judgment debtor within the meaning of sect. 244 of the last Code.(2) A person who has purchased a putni holding at a sale in execution of a money-decree, but has not had his name registered in the landlord's register, is bound by a subsequent decree for arrears of rent obtained by the landlord against the registered patnidar and by the sale in execution of that decree, and is therefore a "representative" within the meaning of the section; (3) as is also a person to whom a transferable occupancy holding was mortgaged before its sale in execution of a rent decree; (4) as is also (where the landlord of an occupancy-holding obtains a decree for rent against his recorded tenant) an unregistered transferee of the tenant into whose hands a portion of the holding had previously passed,(5) and a mortgagee from the judgment-debtor after attachment.(6)

Auction-purchaser.—A distinction must be kept between the case of an auction-purchaser who, purchasing property affected by the decree, such as the purchase of the equity of the redemption in a mortgage suit, is a representative of the party whose interest is so purchased, within the meaning of the cases cited in the last paragraph and other cases, such as the auction-purchaser in execution of a simple money decree. The position of the latter was the subject of some conflict of opinion under the preceding Code. It was in some cases held that such an auction-purchaser was not a party nor the representative of a party to the suit.(7) On the other hand it was held

In Magan Lal v. Doshi Mulji, 25 B. 631, 635 (1901), it was said that the auction-purchaser was certainly not the representative of the decree-holder, and it was doubtful whether he was a representative of the judgment-debtor. In Narain Acharjee that when a question arose within this section the fact that the purchaser who was no party to the suit was interested in the result was no bar to the application of the section.(1) This decision of the Privy Council was sometimes understood as laying down that the auction-purchaser was a party or a representative. But this was not so; all that was held was that his interest in the result did not prevent the question being one between the parties.(2) It was also held that the provisions of sect. 244 prohibited a suit by a party or his representative against an auction-purchaser the object of which was to determine a question which properly arose between the parties or their representatives relating to the execution of the decree.(3)

An auction-purchaser therefore (other than one coming within the meaning of the cases cited in the last paragraph) is not a party or a representative of a party.

The purchaser of an undivided share must sue for partition by separate suit.(4) An unrecorded co-sharer in a tenancy is not a representative in interest of the recorded tenant within the meaning of this section.(5)

Sub-section (2).—This is a very just provision intended to remedy mere technical defects. Where a suit is instituted in the same Court as has jurisdiction to execute the decree, the fact that the question has been made the subject of a separate suit in that Court instead of being determined by an order under this section is not a matter affecting jurisdiction but of procedure only,(6) and an objection on this account has been held not to be ground of appeal.(7) The Court has therefore considered and treated a plaint under the circumstances stated as an application in execution (1) The Legislature has now sanctioned this practice both as regards suits which should have been applications, as also in the converse case.

Where an appeal was erroneously presented to the High Court as a first appeal from an order it refused to convert it into a first appeal from a decree under this section in the old Code read with sect. 2 of that Code.(2) Where a suit was barred under the provisions of this section but the order of the Court executing the decree was erroneous, the High Court suggested that the latter Court should review its order.(3)

Sub-section (3).—This sub-section corresponds, with amendments, with the last clause of sect 244 of the Code of 1882, which was added to that Code by Act VII. of 1888. The Court executing a decree can go into the disputed question of the transfer of the decree.(4) Indeed, the question whether a person is a representative must be decided under this section and not by separate suit.(5) The sub-section refers to a case where there is a dispute between two or more persons as to which of these is the representative of a person who had been a party to the suit. It does not include a case in which there could be no representative as there was no party to be represented.(6) Nor can an application by the assignee of an auction-purchaser to be placed on the record be dealt with under this section, as the expression "representative" does not mean the representative of a party to the execution-proceedings, but of a party to the suit.(7)a It was held by the Madras High Court that the amendment noted did not take away the right of suit at the instance of an assignee of a decree for a declaration as to the validity of his assignment; it being said to be unreasonable to construe the phrase "and not by a separate suit" as applicable to the question referred to in the amendment.(8) The sub-section has been amended so as to make it compulsory on the Court to determine the question of representation. See ante, "History and scope of section."

An appeal lies even in a case in which the question is not between the parties o the suit or their representatives, but only between the decree-holder and a erson claiming as his assignee.(1) The effect of this sub-section is to give the ight of appeal against an order determining whether a party applying for xecution is or is not the representative of the decree-holder.(2)

A Judge who stayed execution-proceedings, pending a suit in which an ssue had been raised as to the validity of a will under which the applicant for xecution claimed, was held entitled to act upon his determination of that issue n the execution-proceedings.(3)

The Code contains no provisions under which a representative of a deceased lecree-holder can have his name entered on the record when nothing emains to be done under the decree beyond its execution, nor is there any ecessity for any such entry, as proceedings in execution do not abate on the udgment-creditor's death, and his representatives are entitled to continue hem.(4)

Explanation.—This Explanation has been added to remove a conflict f decisions under the last Code. It was held by the Calcutta (5) and Allaha- ad (6) High Courts that persons who were exempted from the operation of a lecree, by the dismissal, as respects them, of the suit, were thenceforth strangers nd not parties to the suit and therefore no longer subject to the section. It was considered that as between the party exonerated and the decree-holder, o question relating to execution could arise, because as against him there was o decree to be executed. The Madras (7) and Bombay (8) High Courts, however, eld on the contrary that a person was a party to an action, although he might have ceased to have any connection with the suit before the decree was passed nd would still come under that clause. The Legislature by this Explanation has now adopted the latter view.

Appeal.—The object of the section being that the Court having the parties (and other persons interested) before it, should decide all questions relating to execution arising between them, in place of allowing one or the other of them to put his adversary to the delay and cost of a separate suit in cases in which, but for this section, it might be possible for him to do so; in order to effect this object completely, without injustice to the parties, an order under this section has been included within the definition of decree in sect. 2 of the Code.(1)

In order to determine whether an appeal lies, it must be first ascertained whether the case is one which falls within the section. In the first place, the order complained of must be one made by a Court executing a decree.(2) If so, the question determined by it must be one relating to execution. If it is not, then, unless an appeal is elsewhere expressly given, there is none.(3) In the first place, there is a distinction between acts done in pursuance of a decree and acts done in execution of it. So an order passed in a suit for partition subsequent to the decree appointing a commission to make the partition is not an order in execution.(4)

There is no appeal from an order not relating to the enforcement of a decree, such as an order of a Judge confirming the report of the commissioner for taking accounts refusing to require the defendants to give inspection of certain books, for such an order is not within the contemplation of the section.(5) Nor is an order appealable which is a mere ministerial act, such as a direction to a subordinate officer to receive money, there being no question in controversy finally determined.(6) There is no appeal if the matter is one indirectly and remotely relating to the execution of the decree.(7) But though the property may not be the subject of the decree, if it has been interfered with in execution, the matter relates to execution.(8) Where an order absolute for sale or foreclosure of mortgaged property has been made, any question that arises as to that order has been held not to relate to execution of the decree.(9) Nor is there an appeal against an order made when no question arises in execution of decree, the decree having been already executed.(1) A question whether the decree itself is invalid is not one relating to execution.(2) Further, the question must be between parties or representatives,(3) and not between a party and his representative (4) or between co-decree-holders.(5) See notes on the terms "Parties," "Representatives" and "Auction-Purchaser," ante. Again, assuming that the matter is one mentioned in the section, the order must fall within the definition of a decree. It must be an adjudication of the right claimed, and the determination must be final.(6) It is not every order made in execution which is a decree, otherwise every interlocutory order in an execution-proceeding, such as an order granting or refusing process for the examination of witnesses, would be appealable.(7) So an order merely determining a point of law arising incidentally or otherwise in the course of a proceeding and not refusing or granting relief, is not appealable,(8) nor is an order on an application to set aside a sale under O. XXI. r. 9,(9) nor is an order for security in stay of execution, for it does not determine the rights of the parties.(10) Nor is there an appeal when it is otherwise excluded, as in

"Where an application to execute a decree."—This was held to mean any application to execute a decree, and was not confined to the last application preceding the expiry of 12 years from either of the points of time mentioned.(2) The former section referred only to decrees for the payment of money (3) or delivery of other property. A decree for the sale of mortgaged property was held not to be a decree for the payment of money, even though the judgment-debtor was personally liable for the deficiency.(4) The application of the provision has apparently been extended to all decrees with the exception stated.

The words "and granted" have been omitted. "Granted" has been held to mean "admitted" (5) as stated in O. XXI. r. 17, and in addition there has been issue of process in execution.(6) "Any fresh application" has been substituted for "subsequent application," (7) with a view to rendering it clearer that ancillary applications merely to complete arrested execution are not obnoxious to the bar.(8) It has been held that since the right to enforce a decree is a substantive right, and not matter of procedure, this section cannot bar the execution of decrees which were alive when the present Code came into force.

that a judgment-creditor should prove that the fraud of the judgment-debtor continued so as to prevent execution of the decree at any time.(1) The action of a judgment-debtor, who, knowing that a warrant of attachment has issued against his moveable property, locks up his house and so prevents the moveable property therein from being attached, amounts to fraud,(2) as also a frivolous application to set aside the decree made for the purpose of delay (3) and preventing (4) or evading (5) arrest or attachment.(6) The word "fraud" here has a wider sense than that in which it is generally used in English law.(7)

Article 180, Limitation Act.—The former section which prescribed an absolute period of limitation, and was apparently rendered applicable to a High Court by sect. 638, was in conflict with article 180 of the Limitation Act, which permits a revivor in the case of decrees of High Courts and orders of His Majesty in Council. Statutory authority has therefore been given to the rulings which declare that article to be independent of the section.(8) This is art. 183 of Act IX. of 1908.

transferee was held prohibited from selling mortgaged property in execution of the decree transferred to him by sect. 232 of the last Code if not also by the present section.(1)

[s. 234.] 50. (1) Where a judgment-debtor dies before the decree has been fully satisfied, the holder of the decree may apply to the Court which passed it to execute the same against the legal representative of the deceased.

Legal representative.

(2) Where the decree is executed against such legal representative, he shall be liable only to the extent of the property of the deceased which has come to his hands and has not been duly disposed of; and, for the purpose of ascertaining such liability, the Court executing the decree may, of its own motion or on the application of the decree-holder, compel such legal representative to produce such accounts as it thinks fit.

"Where a judgment-debtor dies."—The section contemplates the case of a person who, being alive when a decree is passed against him, dies before execution is fully had of that decree. Where, therefore, a party to a suit was dead before even the plaint was filed, and a decree was given against him, it was held incapable of enforcement.(2) Where, however, after the trial is concluded, judgment is reserved, and after that a party dies, then on the principle actus curiæ neminifacit injuriam, judgment may be entered up nunc pro tunc and the decree is a valid decree.(3) An attachment,(4) and execution proceedings generally,(5) do not abate, and the section does not apply to cases where the judgment-debtor dies after attachment but before sale.(6) Nor does it apply to a decree-holder seeking possession, if the order for it was passed prior to the death of the judgment-debtor; (7) nor does the Code contemplate the representatives of the judgment-debtor being placed on the record after the appellate decree has been passed.(8) This section applies to an appeal filed during the life of a judgment-debtor, but heard after his death.(9)

"Holder of the decree."—That is the person whose name appears on the record as the person in whose favour the decree was made, or some person whom the Court by order has recognized as the decree-holder from the original plaintiff or his representatives.(10)

"May apply to the Court."—It was held, under the last Code, by the Calcutta High Court, that an application to execute a decree against the legal representative might also be made to the Court to which a decree was transferred for execution.(1) More recently a Full Bench of the Madras High Court held that where a decree of one Court had been transferred to another Court for execution, an application by the decree-holder under this section to execute the decree against the legal representatives of the deceased judgment-debtor must be made to the Court which passed the decree, and not to the Court executing the same.(2) But the same Court has held that an order made by the executing Court is not wholly void, and that an objection on this ground may be waived.(3)

"To execute the same."—The substantive application should be, in the words of the section, one for execution of the decree. But an application for substitution of the legal representatives of a deceased judgment-debtor has been considered in substance an application for execution.(4)

Liability of representative.—This section provides that the Court executing the decree is to ascertain the liability, that is to inquire whether any particular property in the hands of the representative or which came to his hands, was the property of the deceased debtor, and if it has been disposed of, whether it has been duly applied. The question whether property is available for execution is a question relating to execution under sect. 47, and must, when it arises between the persons mentioned in that section, be determined thereunder and not by separate suit.(5) "He shall be liable only to the extent, etc.," indicates that two kinds of property can be attached: first, property of the debtor found in the hands of the representative; and secondly, property of the representative from whatever source derived, to the extent to which he has wasted the assets descended to him without satisfying the debts of the deceased.(6) The representative is, however, liable, summarily, only in respect of the property actually received by him or taken into his disposition.(1) When an application is made under this section the Court should, under O. XXI. r. 21, issue notice on the person named calling upon him to show cause why the decree should not be executed against him as such representative. If he denies that he is so, the Court which passes a decree decides whether the person against whom execution is sought is the legal representative, though it is for the Court executing the decree to decide to what extent such person is liable.(2) The decree-holder should show that property of the deceased has come into the possession of his representative, and it is then on the latter to show that he has properly applied the property.(3) The heirs are liable in respect of assets even though it may be pleaded that the debtor was a benamidar.(4) The right of the decree-holder to have his debt paid out of the assets of the deceased in the hands of the legal representative is not affected by the provisions of sect. 104 of the Probate and Administration Act.(5)

Legal representative.—The last Code did not contain any definition of the term "legal representative." The framers of the former section in using this term must either have understood it in some defined sense, or have intended thereby merely to refer to such persons as, under the law applicable to the particular case, might be held to be the legal representatives of a deceased person. The first supposition was negatived by the fact that the Legislature omitted to declare what were the characteristics of a legal representative for the purposes of this section.(6) It might have been said that such a definition was unnecessary, as the term has a well-known technical meaning. In their strictest and most ordinary sense the words "legal representatives" are understood to mean executors and administrators only.(7)

Though the decisions upon the construction of wills which hold it to be a flexible term and have given it another sense, such as next-of-kin or descendants, do not control its legal meaning in that they proceed upon the principle that if the Court finds that a testator attached to particular words a different meaning from that which is their proper legal sense, the Court is bound so to construe and give effect to the will, not in its strict legal sense, but in the way in which the testator himself used the words,(8) the term is yet one which is naturally capable of a more extended sense than that in which it is ordinarily and strictly employed. Had the Legislature, therefore, intended to confine it to particular persons only, viz., executors or administrators, it would have expressly named these persons and would not have used a term which, though in its most strict sense denoting executor or administrator only, is yet capable of a wider meaning. Where there is an executor or administrator, they alone are the legal representatives of a deceased judgment-debtor.(1) But the section is also commonly applied, both in the case of heirs (2) as well as in that of executors and administrators, and the term "legal representative" has been defined to ordinarily mean all these classes of persons.(3)

When there is no executor or administrator, but succession by heirship as in cases governed by the Bengal School of Hindu Law, or in cases of separate and self acquired property under Mitakshara Law, the decree must be executed against the heir as the legal representative within the meaning of this section.(4) The section has, however, been applied to cases where the succession is otherwise than by heirship to the last holder of an estate, as also to cases where the estate accrues to the present holder by survivorship.(5) In these cases where a decree is passed against a judgment-debtor not in his or her personal capacity, but in a representative capacity, the decree may be executed against the person who, though not an heir of the judgment-debtor, the last holder of the estate, is entitled thereto after his or her death whether as reversioner or surviving co-parcener.(6) So inasmuch as a decree properly obtained against a Hindu widow in her representative capacity is binding upon her husband's reversioner.(7) where a suit has been instituted or defended by a Hindu widow in her representative capacity, the reversioners, though they do not claim through her but as heirs of her husband, have yet been held to be her legal representatives in respect of the estate held by her as such Hindu widow.(8) Again in the case of a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara, though it has been held by the Madras and Allahabad, and formerly by the Calcutta,(1) High Courts, that in the case of a personal decree for money obtained against the father the interest of the latter in the joint ancestral properties is not assets in the hand of the son when he dies, and consequently, notwithstanding his obligation to pay his father's debt, proceedings cannot be taken against him under this section as the legal representative of his father, the contrary view has been adopted by the Bombay High Court in that the obligation of a son to satisfy his father's debt is within the scope of the decree against the father whether on the ground of representation of the sons by their father,(2) or on the ground that the creditor has the power to attach and sell the entire interest in the property in execution proceedings against the father; (3) and the Calcutta High Court has recently held that the liability may be determined in the execution proceedings if the legal representative has been properly brought on the record under this section.(4) This question is now settled by sect. 53, post. Where, moreover, the interest of the father has been attached during his lifetime,(5) or a decree directing a sale of hypothecated property has been passed in the lifetime of the judgment-debtor,(6) or the judgment-debtor has been expressly sued as representing the undivided family,(7) or the decree charges the family property; (8) in all these cases the decree, it has been held, may be executed against those who in succession, in time, take by the legal title of survivorship and not by that of heirship.

The principle under consideration has been still further extended to the case of a person who, without title as administrator, executor, heir, reversioner or surviving co-parcener, is the de facto possessor of the estate of a deceased Hindu, it having been held that he must be treated for some purposes as his representative, and that a judgment obtained against such a representative is not a mere nullity.(9) The first of these cases proceeds upon the assumption that under the law as it existed prior to 1881 the executor did not represent the deceased until he had obtained probate, and the hardship in the particular case which led the Court to take the view it did, no longer exists. The Madras High Court has more recently held that there is no authority for holding that the words "legal representative" include any person who has taken possession of the property of a deceased judgment-debtor, and that a stranger in possession of property who was not a party to the decree ought not to be proceeded against in execution or otherwise than by a regular suit, and that the words "legal representative" cannot be taken to include any person who does not in law represent the estate of the deceased.(1) And though in the two former cases the question arose with reference to a suit brought by the creditor against the representative, and not with reference to proceedings taken in execution of a decree, the Calcutta High Court has expressed an opinion that the principle underlying the observations in these cases are equally applicable to proceedings in execution as to proceedings by regular suit.(2)

From this review of the authorities it will appear that judicial decisions prior to this Code extended the sense of the term "legal representative" beyond that of its ordinary meaning of "administrator, executor and heir," and though such extension has been attended with doubt and has in some cases been the subject of conflicting decisions, it was too late to endeavour, however convenient it might have been, to secure for the term that which is perhaps its strict and legitimate sense. The term was therefore not limited to administrators, executors and heirs, and must have been held to include any person who in law represented the estate of a deceased judgment-debtor.(3) And the term has now been so defined in sect. 2, clause (11).

A decree passed against the Valiya Rajah of a Kovilagom is primâ facie binding on his successor and his Kovilagom.(4) The successor to an unsettled polliem is not liable for the debts of the person whose heir he is as respects that polliem. The polliem reverts absolutely to the Government, and by the fresh grant to the successor a newly created estate for life becomes vested in him.(5) In the undermentioned case an impartible Raj in the possession of the respondent was held not to be assets of the deceased, nor was he the legal representative of the deceased; (6) and a decree against a limited company was held unenforceable against another company.(7) A decree containing an injunction can be enforced against a legal representative under this section.(8)

Execution has been allowed under this section against the legal representative of the legal representative.(1)

There may be an estoppel. Thus, though ordinarily a Court has no power to put a debtor's vendee on the record,(2) where a person filed a petition in a suit, saying that all the property of the judgment-debtor had passed to him and for several years opposed execution, it was held that though his name was not on the record he had yet made himself liable as a defendant.(3) The legal representative binds all property in his possession, and where an adult legal representative was in possession a sale was held good and not affected by the non-appointment of a guardian ad litem.(4)

The Code of 1859 gave power to execute a decree against the estate of a deceased judgment-debtor. A proposal to revive this provision having been excepted to, the criticisms were met by a further proposal to give a remedy against the person in possession of the estate. As already stated in the last paragraph, it was formerly a question whether the term legal representative in sect. 239 of the last Code included a stranger who, not being a party to the decree, was in possession of the property of the deceased. It was held (5) under the Code of 1859, and this appears to be law now, that if no other legal representative can be found, the decree-holder may then proceed against persons in possession of the estate belonging to the deceased. The definition in sect. 2, clause (11), includes a person intermeddling with the estate.

It was proposed to enact that the death of a judgment-debtor before the decree had been fully executed should not be deemed to affect the validity as against such legal representative of any proceeding lawfully taken during his lifetime. Where property has actually been sold by order of the Court executing the decree, probably no difficulty arises. This clause was, however, thought at one time to be necessary to meet the case of a judgment-debtor dying before the sale is effected.(6) It has not, however, been introduced.

Enforcement of decree against legal representative.

52. (1) Where a decree is passed against a party as the legal representative of a deceased person, and the decree is for the payment of money out of the property of the deceased, it may be executed by the attachment and sale of any such property.

(2) Where no such property remains in the possession of the judgment-debtor and he fails to satisfy the Court that he has duly applied such property of the deceased as is proved to have come into his possession, the decree may be executed against the judgment-debtor to the extent of the property in respect of which he has failed so to satisfy the Court in the same manner as if the decree had been against him personally.

Decrees against legal representatives.—This section corresponds with sect. 203 of Act VIII. of 1859 save for some slight verbal alterations and the substitution of the words "remains in the possession of the judgment-debtor and he" by s. 252, Act XIV. of 1882, for the words "can be found and the judgment-debtor" of the Code of 1859, and the words "in respect of which he has failed so to satisfy the Court" by the present Code for the words "not duly applied by him" previously appearing. The Code of 1859 also had a section (211) providing the same procedure where the decree was ordered to be executed against the legal representative.

"Where a decree is passed."—A decree passed against a person already dead, cannot however, be executed against his legal representatives.(1)

"Legal representative of the deceased."—This includes persons who have been legal representatives in execution proceedings; (2) and the heir of an intestate.(3) A person taking possession of the estate of a deceased Hindu leaving a will may be treated as the legal representative until Probate is taken; (4) and the widow of a Hindu insolvent may be his legal representative notwithstanding order vesting his estate in the Official Assignee; (5) but a person is not the legal representative where another has obtained grant of administration,(6) nor if he does not represent the estate of the deceased.(7)

Where a Hindu widow is sued as such and as guardian of her son and a decree obtained against her as her husband's representative, the sale in execution of property includes the son's interest therein,(1) as also where the son was an adopted son; (2) but where the widow in the plaint was described as the widow of A deceased and the mother of D and B minors, and the decree (on a bond due by her husband) was against her personally it was held the sale of the minor's property was invalid.(3) So also where a Hindu defendant died leaving a widow and a minor son and the suit was continued against the widow, not as guardian of her son, and after the widow's death, against the sister of the deceased though not appointed guardian ad litem of the minor or administrator of his estate, the minor son was not bound.(4) So where a widow borrowed, not as administrator and without pledging any specific property of the estate, it was held to be her personal debt,(5) that is so where the debt is for rent,(6) but not where it was for necessary repairs.(7) Where, however, the mother of the deceased obtained a personal decree against his widow for maintenance payable after his death, only the widow's interest in the estate of the deceased could be sold in execution.(8) The test as to whether a decree against a Hindu widow binds the reversioners is whether the cause of action was one personal to her or one affecting the estate of the reversioner; (9) and the question must be decided from the decree and the execution record.(10)

As to Mahomedans, a decree against one of the heirs cannot bind the other heirs,(11) and a decree by consent against some of the heirs for a debt due by the deceased only binds those who are parties.(12) [This is not so in the case of Hindus.(13)] A sale under a decree against a Mahomedan daughter, who though sued as representative, did not represent the whole estate, there being a widow and another daughter, carried only the share of the judgment-debtor; (14) so also a Mahomedan daughter is not bound by a decree made against the widow of her father in respect of his debts or by a subsequent sale by the widows to the judgment-creditor, but could only recover her share of the property on payment of her share of her father's debts; (15) Mahomedan heirs, who are not parties to a suit, not being bound by a sale in execution but cannot recover their shares without paying their share of the debts; (1) as the purchaser does not acquire the whole estate but acquires it subject to all legal and equitable rights of inheritance.(2) Thus in a mortgage sale the heirs of the mortgagor who were not parties to the suit were given an opportunity to redeem.(3) The Bombay High Court, however, held that a daughter though not a party was bound by the sale.(4) When, however, an heir in possession is sued and a decree made against the assets of the deceased the decree binds the other heirs.(5)

"Decree is for the payment of money."—A decree for accounts within a specified period which the defendant survived without proceedings being taken against him cannot, after his death, be executed against his widow and representative.(6)

"Out of the property of the deceased."—The legal representative can set up an answer that the property in her possession is her own and does not belong to the deceased's estate.(7) A decree obtained against the remainder-man, a brother of the deceased, will not enable the creditor to touch the estate in the hands of the widow; (8) but in execution of a decree against a joint family property bought by a member of the family with joint funds may be taken in execution.(9) The Court in execution proceedings will look at the substance of the transaction.(10) See also sect. 53.

"May be executed."—The legal representative is not entitled in the execution stage to reopen the whole case and to inquire into the nature of the debt; (11) but can bring a suit.(12) Sect. 282 of the Indian Succession Act, where applicable, does not prevent a decree-holder having the whole of his decree satisfied out of the assets of the deceased so far as they go to the exclusion of other creditors whose claims are admitted but who have not obtained decrees.(13) Where successive applications have been made for years against a party merely as representative of a deceased defendant, execution cannot be taken out against him personally as one of the original defendants, even if he were liable in both capacities.(14)

"Any such property."—Under a decree on a bond against the widow of the deceased obligor, a Hindu, the property of the debtor, described as the property of the widow, was sold, and it was held that the sale was good against the son and heir of the deceased; (1) so, where property is described at the time of the execution sale as the property of the judgment-debtors, who were sued as mere representatives of the deceased judgment-debtor, primâ facie what is sold is the property of the deceased debtor, and even if the decree is in terms as if it were a personal decree yet it must be construed as if it was for the debt of the deceased.(2) But in a case where in the judgment, though not in the decree, the widow (who was only entitled to maintenance) was described as the representative of her deceased husband, the suit being for the husband's debt, the sale of her interest did not affect the deceased's estate.(3) To ascertain what was sold under the right title and interest of the widow the Court is at liberty to look at the judgment. If the judgment bound the reversionary heir, the purchaser took the estate absolutely.(4) Under a decree against a widow as representative of her deceased husband, a member of a joint Mitakshara family, property of the deceased, passing by survivorship to the other members, cannot be sold.(5) This confines the procedure to property remaining in the possession of the legal representative, leaving the creditor to follow property improperly aliened by the legal representative by a separate suit.(6) The onus of proving the legal necessity of a sale by a Hindu widow is on the purchaser; and recitals in mortgages or sale-deeds are not sufficient evidence.(7) A Hindu widow can, with the consent of the next reversioners, transfer her inherited estate inter vivos,(8) though not by bequest.(9)

"If no such property remains."—The decree-holder must satisfy the Court as to this before the Court will proceed under the second clause of this section.(10) If the legal representative has sold such property to a third party, the former is personally liable for the debt to the extent of the assets he has received.(11)

"Has duly applied."—This should be proved by filing and proving an inventory,(12) and unless he proves that he has duly applied, his property is liable; (13) whether the debt became due before or after the death of the debtor.(14) He has only to account up to the full value of the assets he received as legal representative, and if he has properly done so, the decree can no longer be executed even though he may still hold property which originally belonged to the deceased judgment-debtor. If the decree be against him as representative, it is a legal and reasonable presumption, until the contrary is proved, that payments made by him were as representative alone.(1)

"Such property of the deceased."—The question whether the entire estate in a zemindary (and not merely the zemindar's life-interest) was sold in execution and bought by a purchaser is a question of mixed law and fact to be determined according to the circumstances of each case,(2) and the state of the law as understood at the time of the sale is to be considered in such determination.(3) Ghatwali lands in Birbhoom are not liable to be seized in the hands of the son in execution of a decree against the deceased father; (4) the surplus proceeds of such tenure collected during the lifetime of the judgment-debtor are liable,(5) but not those accrued after his death.(6) A shikmi ghatwali tenure is not liable, (7) but ghatwali tenures in Kharukpore are.(8)

"Proved to have come into his possession."—The onus is on the decree-holder to do this; (9) he has to show that some assets came to the legal representative, and the onus is then shifted to the latter to prove how much came and how it has been applied.(10) The legal representative may admit receipt of assets by implication, e.g. by asking time to pay the amount of the decree.(11)

"In the same manner."—This may be by detention in the civil jail.(12)

53. For the purposes of section 50 and section 52, property in the hands of a son or other descendant which is liable under Hindu law for the payment of the debt of a deceased ancestor, in respect of which a decree has been passed, shall be deemed to be property of the deceased which has come to the hands of the son or other descendant as his legal representative.

Liability of ancestral property.

Ancestral property.—See as to this sect. 50, ante, "Legal representative." This section, which is new, has been added in order to set at rest a question on which the High Courts are divided in opinion.(1) It is true that where a son or grandson takes any ancestral property by survivorship, he is bound to pay out of such property all debts of his ancestors not incurred for immoral or illegal purposes; but whether the creditor can follow the property in the hands of the son or grandson in execution is a debatable point under the Code. The question is merely one of procedure, and the Legislature has come to the conclusion that any controversy between the parties with regard to the liability of the son or grandson to pay the debts of his ancestor should be determined in execution, it being open to them to raise any objection or defence in such proceedings which they might have raised in a separate suit instituted by the creditor, the section not imposing upon them a greater liability than that imposed by the Hindu law.

In execution of a decree on mortgage, executed by a Mitakshara father as manager of and for the benefit of the family, a son's share is saleable.(2) But a member of a Mitakshara joint-family cannot alienate any particular share as his own.(3)

For the meaning of "the property of the deceased" see note on the last section.

Partition of estate or separation of share.

Decrees for partition.—This section corresponds with sect. 225 o. Act VIII. of 1859; that section, however, provided that the division made by the Collector should be "under the orders of the Court according to the rules in orce for the partition of an estate paying revenue to Government." These words were repealed by sect. 265, Act X. of 1877, and the words "and according to the aw, if any, for the time being in force for the partition or the separate possession of hares, of such estates" inserted by Act XIV. of 1882. The words in italics were added by the present Code, the words "assessed to the payment of undivided" being substituted for "paying."

"The decree is for the partition."—A decree for partition being a oint declaration of the rights of persons interested in the property, an application or execution by one party may be continued by another.(1) Such a decree loes not operate as a severance so long as it remains under appeal.(2) If the lecree be simply for possession of certain definite land, this section does not empower the Collector to partition property amongst the co-sharers.(3)

"Estate."—The word must be read in its ordinary signification and not n the limited and defective sense in which it is used in Act VIII. of 1876.(4) It does not include raiyat-wari tenures in Madras, but includes permanently settled estates; (5) but formerly that did not apply to Bombay.(6) It does not nclude a plot of land which falls short of being the share of a co-sharer of a mahal.(7)

"Shall be made."—A Court cannot depart from a decree for partition by allowing certain property, directed to be partitioned, to remain joint unless all the co-parceners consent.(8)

"By the Collector."—It must be made solely by the Collector,(9) ncluding the delivery of the shares to their respective allottees; (10) and the execution is entirely in his hands; (11) the Court cannot interfere with him,(11) nor examine his work or direct him to make a fresh partition.(12) The Collector cannot, however, refuse to partition according to the decree; (13) and the Court is not deprived of its judicial power to hear and decide objections to the division of the estate made by the Collector.(14) The partition must, t was held, be made by the Collector only in cases where the partition sought ncludes the partition of revenue so as to convert the estate into several revenue paying estates.(1) Later, however, it was held that partition of lands in a revenue paying estate could only be made by a Collector.(2) This, however, was overruled by a Full Bench decision holding that a Civil Court could partition revenue paying estates save when the partition sought a separate allotment of revenue.(3) Under sect. 107 of the U.I. Land Revenue Act, the partition cannot be made by the Collector until the decree-holder's name is recorded in the revenue papers.(4) Where a person was entitled in pursuance of an order to be put into possession of a particular village, and in execution of this order the Collector put him in possession, under this section, of a wrong village, it was held that the order of the Collector was a mere nullity, and that such person was entitled to sue for possession of the village he was rightfully entitled to.(5)

ARREST AND DETENTION.

[s. 336.] 55. (1) A judgment-debtor may be arrested in execution of a decree at any hour and on any day, and shall, as soon as practicable, be brought before the Court, and his detention may be in the civil prison of the district in which the Court ordering the detention is situate, or, where such civil prison does not afford suitable accommodation, in any other place which the Local Government may appoint for the detention of persons ordered by the Courts of such district to be detained :

Provided, secondly, that no outer door of a dwelling-house shall be broken open unless such dwelling-house is in the occupancy of the judgment-debtor and he refuses or in any way prevents access thereto, but when the officer authorized to make the arrest has duly gained access to any dwelling-house, he may break open the door of any room in which he has reason to believe the judgment-debtor to be found :

Provided, thirdly, that, if the room is in the actual occupancy of a woman who is not the judgment-debtor and who according to the customs of the country does not appear in public, the officer authorized to make the arrest, shall give notice to her that she is at liberty to withdraw, and, after allowing a reasonable time for her to withdraw and giving her reasonable facility for withdrawing, may enter the room for the purpose of making the arrest:

Provided, fourthly, that, where the decree in execution of which a judgment-debtor is arrested, is a decree for the payment of money and the judgment-debtor pays the amount of the decree and the costs of the arrest to the officer arresting him, such officer shall at once release him.

(2) The Local Government may, by notification in the local official Gazette, declare that any person or class of persons whose arrest might be attended with danger or inconvenience to the public shall not be liable to arrest in execution of a decree otherwise than in accordance with such procedure as may be prescribed by the Local Government on this behalf.

(3) Where a judgment-debtor is arrested in execution of a decree for the payment of money and brought before the Court, the Court shall inform him that he may apply to be declared an insolvent, and that he will be discharged if he has not committed any act of bad faith regarding the subject of the application and if he complies with the provisions of the law of insolvency for the time being in force.

(4) Where a judgment-debtor expresses his intention to apply to be declared an insolvent and furnishes security, to the satisfaction of the Court, that he will within one month so apply, and that he will appear, when called upon, in any proceeding upon the application or upon the decree in execution of which he was arrested, the Court shall release him from arrest, and, if he fails so to apply and to appear, the Court may either direct the security to be realized or commit him to the civil prison in execution of the decree.

Arrest.—This section corresponds with sect. 336 of Act X. of 1877 save that the 2nd and 3rd provisos did not then appear. These provisos, as also the words, "In the case of a surety, such security may be realized in manner provided by sect. 253," were added by sect. 336 of Act XIV. of 1882. In such Code the words in the first sub-clause, "detention," "civil prison," and "detained," were expressed by "imprisonment," "civil jail," or "jail" and "imprisoned." The second proviso then commenced "no outer door of a dwelling house shall be broken open; but." This has now been altered as indicated in italics by the present Code, which substitutes "break" for "unfasten and." The words in italics in the 3rd and 4th proviso and in the 2nd and 4th sub-clauses have been added by the present Code, the words "furnishes security to the satisfaction of the Court" being substituted for "furnish sufficient security." The third sub-clause in the Codes of 1877 and 1882 was prefaced by "The Local Government may by notification published in the official Gazette, direct that whenever" instead of "Where," and ended with the words "places all his property in possession of a receiver appointed by the Court" instead of the words in italics: it also provided that the application to be declared an insolvent was to be "under Chapter XX." See now Provisional Insolvency Act III. of 1907. The provision as to the method of realizing the security has been omitted, as it comes within the provisions of sect. 145.

"A judgment-debtor may be arrested."—A purdanasheen lady was not exempt from arrest: (1) but see sect. 56, which was introduced into the Code in 1888.

"May be arrested."—The officer arresting a judgment-debtor must have the warrant of arrest in his possession at the time of making the apprehension, otherwise it is illegal.(2) A decree against the hypothecated property and against the defendants personally, and containing no condition for execution first against the property, may be enforced against the person or the property of the judgment-debtor, whichever the decree-holder thinks best; (3) but a decree merely against mortgaged property and making no personal order for payment, cannot be executed against the person of the judgment-debtor.(4)

"On any day."—An arrest may be made on Sunday under process of a Mofussil Court.(5)

"In any other place."—A list of such places has been notified for Burma,(6) and also for Madras.(7)

Sub-clause (1), second proviso.—Under the former Code an outer door could not be broken open. It was proposed to enact that if the judgment-debtor or any person in whose dwelling-house the officer authorized to make the arrest had reason to believe the judgment-debtor was to be found, refused access to his house, such officer might remove or open any lock or bolt and might break open any outer door. The amendments in this proviso were suggested to prevent vexatious forms of resistance to execution which constantly obstruct decree-holders in the execution of their decrees. Afterwards, however, the amendment took its present form, the Select Committee stating that they had carefully considered the provisions as to breaking open dwelling-houses, and that they had come to the conclusion that it should be limited to dwelling-houses in the occupancy of the judgment-debtor.

"Who is not the judgment-debtor."—It was formerly held that no order was necessary to enter a zenana of a purdanasheen judgment-debtor,(8) but that decision was before sect. 56 was included in the Code.

Sub-clause (2).—This sub-clause is intended to cover the cases of certain persons or classes of persons whose summary arrest might, as in the case of railway servants, be attended with danger or inconvenience to the public.

Sub-clause (3).—Under the Codes of 1877 and 1882 this provision only extended to such provinces as were notified by the Local Governments. Such notifications were published as to Assam,(1) Bengal,(2) Bombay,(3) Burma,(4) Central Provinces,(5) Madras,(6) N.W.P. and Oudh,(7) and the Punjab,(8) As to the Provincial Insolvency law, see now Act III. of 1907, which takes the place of Chapter XX. of the former Code.

"Apply to be declared."—Under the Codes of 1877 and 1882 this provision ran "apply under Chapter XX. to be declared." That Chapter did not apply to the towns of Calcutta, Madras, or Bombay.(9) In such Presidency towns the judgment-debtor might have applied under the Act for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors, 11 & 12 Vict. c. 21.(10)

"Expresses his intention to apply."—If he does not, and is committed to jail, he might from jail apply under Chapter XX. of the previous Code (but now the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1907), and may be released under its provisions.(11) This section only applies to judgment-debtors who are under arrest and not already committed to jail. When a debtor is imprisoned he can only be discharged under sect. 58.(12) See also O. XXI. r. 40.

"Furnishes security."—The surety was under the Code of 1882 discharged on the judgment-debtor filing his petition in insolvency ; (13) but under the present section apparently the surety would not be discharged until the judgment-debtor had "appeared" also.(14) A surety is discharged by the death of the judgment-debtor before expiration of the time specified in the security bond ; (15) or if the proceedings taken in execution of the decree wherein the security was furnished comes to an end or are struck off ; (16) or if security is deposited on conditions and the judgment-debtor dies before an order is made on his application to be declared an insolvent.(1) Where the judgment-debtor has applied for declaration of insolvency, and proceedings in insolvency are pending on his application, no application for execution can be made against the judgment-debtor's surety.(2)

"Shall release him from arrest."—A judgment-debtor expressing his intention to file a petition and schedule under 11 & 12 Vict. c. 21, and complying with the conditions of this section, is entitled to be discharged from custody; (3) but he will be liable, though he has taken the benefit of the insolvency sections and while yet undischarged, to arrest in execution in respect of an unscheduled debt.(4) A judgment-debtor, who being arrested and released on furnishing security under this section, but who failed to apply to be declared an insolvent within the prescribed time, is liable to arrest, but not being arrested may apply to be declared an insolvent at a subsequent date.(5)

"Security to be realized."—A transferee decree-holder whose transfer has been recognized is entitled to execute against the surety.(6) Where the surety by his bond undertook to pay the amount of the decree if the judgment-debtor did not do so within a specified time and agreed that execution might issue under the bond without suit, it was held, that though the bond was somewhat outside the scope of this section, as it was then worded, summary execution could be taken out.(7) But where the bond, besides the usual covenants, contained further stipulations as to what should happen if the judgment-debtor's application in insolvency were refused, it was held that the latter stipulations did not come within the purview of this section as it was then worded.(8) The enforcement of the liabilities of sureties is now governed by sect. 145. See notes thereto.(9)

Revision.—An order refusing a surety's discharge not being appealable, is open to revision under sect. 115.(10)

Subsistence-allowance.

57. The Local Government may fix scales, graduated according to rank, race and nationality, of monthly allowances payable for the subsistence of judgment-debtors. [s. 338.]

Subsistence allowances.—For notifications (1) by the Local Government of Madras, see Madras List of Local Rules and Orders, ed. 1898, vol. i., p. 195; see Burmah Rules Manual, ed. 1897, p. 115; and for N.W.P., see North Western Provinces and Oudh List of Local Rules and Orders, ed. 1894, p. 113. Sects. 339 and 340 are now O. XXI. r. 39, post.

Detention and release.

58. (1) Every person detained in the civil prison in execution of a decree shall be so detained,— [s. 342.]

(a) where the decree is for the payment of a sum of money exceeding fifty rupees, for a period of six months, and,

(b) in any other case, for a period of six weeks:

Provided that he shall be released from such detention before the expiration of the said period of six months or six weeks, as the case may be,— [s. 341.]

(i) on the amount mentioned in the warrant for his detention being paid to the officer in charge of the civil prison, or

(ii) on the decree against him being otherwise fully satisfied, or

(iii) on the request of the person on whose application he has been so detained, or

(iv) on the omission by the person, on whose application he has been so detained, to pay subsistence-allowance:

Provided, also, that he shall not be released from such detention under clause (ii) or clause (iii), without the order of the Court.

(2) A judgment-debtor released from detention under this section shall not merely by reason of his release be discharged from his debt, but he shall not be liable to be re-arrested under the decree in execution of which he was detained in the civil prison.

Duration of imprisonment.—The first portion of the section down to the Proviso corresponds with sect. 278 of Act VIII. of 1859 and sect. 342 of the last Code, though the form of the section has been remodelled (vide post).

(1) O'Kinealy, note to sect. 338.

The section after the Proviso corresponds (with verbal alterations) to sect. 341 of the last Code, omitting clause (f) of that section, which is no longer necessary owing to the remodelled form of the former sect. 342. A prisoner once discharged for want of deposit of subsistence-money should not be retaken.(1) Where a person is imprisoned under sect. 481 (now O. XXXVIII. r. 4), post, imprisonment suffered after decree must be taken into consideration in calculating the six months.(2) On the expiration of the period, the prisoner is entitled to his discharge, whether the imprisonment has been continuous or only at intervals.(3) The imprisonment is not a satisfaction of the decree, and the debtor can be adjudicated an insolvent for it; (4) or his personal property may be taken in execution under the same decree.(5) This section does not empower a Judge to fix a term of imprisonment at his discretion within the maximum. If none of the conditions mentioned in the proviso are fulfilled before the expiry of six months, or six weeks as the case may be, the judgment-debtor remains in jail the full time.(6) The language of clause (1) has thus been recast to show that this provision does not confer on the Court a discretion to fix shorter periods of imprisonment than those prescribed. This section does not apply to cases of imprisonment for contempt of Court.(7)

[s. 653.] 59. (1) At any time after a warrant for the arrest of a judgment-debtor has been issued the Court may cancel it on the ground of his serious illness.

Release on ground of illness.

(2) Where a judgment-debtor has been arrested, the Court may release him if, in its opinion, he is not in a fit state of health to be detained in the civil prison.

[s. 653 (3) and (4).] (3) Where a judgment-debtor has been committed to the civil prison, he may be released therefrom—

(a) by the Local Government, on the ground of the existence of any infectious or contagious disease, or

(b) by the committing Court, or any Court to which that Court is subordinate, on the ground of his suffering from any serious illness.

(4) A judgment-debtor released under this section may be re-arrested, but the period of his detention in the civil prison shall not in the aggregate exceed that prescribed by section 58.

Illness of judgment-debtor.—This section corresponds with sect. 653 of the last Code. Sect. 653 was added to that Code by sect. 8 of Act VI. of 1888.

ATTACHMENT.

60. (1) The following property is liable to attachment and sale in execution of a decree, namely, lands, houses or other buildings, goods, money, banknotes, cheques, bills of exchange, hundis, promissory notes, Government securities, bonds or other securities for money, debts, shares in a corporation and, save as hereinafter mentioned, all other saleable property, moveable or immoveable, belonging to the judgment-debtor, or over which, or the profits of which, he has a disposing power which he may exercise for his own benefit, whether the same be held in the name of the judgment-debtor or by another person in trust for him or on his behalf: [s. 266.]

Property liable to attachment and sale in execution of decree.

Provided that the following particulars shall not be liable to such attachment or sale, namely:—

(a) the necessary wearing-apparel, cooking vessels, beds and bedding of the judgment-debtor, his wife and children, and such personal ornaments as, in accordance with religious usage, cannot be parted with by any woman;

(b) tools of artizans, and, where the judgment-debtor is an agriculturist, his implements of husbandry and such cattle and seed-grain as may, in the opinion of the Court, be necessary to enable him to earn his livelihood as such, and such portion of agricultural produce or of any class of agricultural produce as may have been declared to be free from liability under the provisions of the next following section;

(c) houses and other buildings (with the materials and the sites thereof and the land immediately appurtenant thereto and necessary for their enjoyment) belonging to an agriculturist and occupied by him;

(d) books of account;

(e) a mere right to sue for damages;

(f) any right of personal service;

(g) stipends and gratuities allowed to pensioners of the Government, or payable out of any service family pension fund notified in the Gazette of India by the Governor General in Council in this behalf, and political pensions;

(h) allowances (being less than salary) of any public officer or of any servant of a railway company or local authority while absent from duty;

(i) the salary or allowances equal to salary of any such public officer or servant as is referred to in clause (h), while on duty, to the extent of—

(i) the whole of the salary, where the salary does not exceed twenty rupees monthly;

(ii) twenty rupees monthly, where the salary exceeds twenty rupees and does not exceed forty rupees monthly; and

(iii) one moiety of the salary in any other case;

(j) the pay and allowances of persons to whom the Indian Articles of War apply;

(k) all compulsory deposits and other sums in or derived from any fund to which the Provident Funds Act, 1897, for the time being applies in so far as they are declared by the said Act not to be liable to attachment;

(l) the wages of labourers and domestic servants whether payable in money or in kind;

(m) an expectancy of succession by survivorship or other merely contingent or possible right or interest;

(n) a right to future maintenance;

(o) any allowance declared by any law passed under the Indian Councils Acts, 1861 and 1892, to be exempt from liability to attachment or sale in execution of a decree; and,

(p) where the judgment-debtor is a person liable for the payment of land-revenue, any moveable property which, under any law for the time being applicable to him, is exempt from sale for the recovery of an arrear of such revenue.

Explanation.—The particulars mentioned in clauses (g), (h), (i), (j), (l) and (o) are exempt from attachment or sale whether before or after they are actually payable.

(2) Nothing in this section shall be deemed—

(a) to exempt houses and other buildings (with the materials and the sites thereof and the lands immediately appurtenant thereto and necessary for their enjoyment) from attachment or sale in execution of decrees for rent of any such house, building, site or land, or

(b) to affect the provisions of the Army Act or of any similar law for the time being in force.

Property attachable.—The first sub-clause of this section corresponds with sect. 205 of Act VIII. of 1859 save that the words "or other buildings," "saleable" and "or over which, or the profits of which, he has a disposing power which he may exercise for his own benefit" were added by sect. 266 of Act X. of 1877, while the words "the capital or joint stock of any railway, banking or other public Company or" after the words "shares in" have been omitted by the present Code. Act X. of 1877 added the provisos. According to that Act (i) ran "one moiety of the salary of a public officer or of the servant of a Railway Company" and the final proviso (b) "to affect the Statute for the time being in force for punishing mutiny and desertion and for the better payment of the Army and their quarters." The final proviso (b) was given its present form, save for the words in italics, by Act XIV. of 1882, which also altered the wording of the first proviso (b) and added the words "and gratuities" to proviso (g). Act VII. of 1888 gave proviso (i) its present form save that it then made no reference to "allowances equal to salary" and "while on duty," and the same Act added provisos (o) and (p), and the words "and bedding" in proviso (a), and "and seed grain" in proviso (b), and "and (o)" in the Explanation. The word "Indian" in proviso (j) was substituted for "Native" by Act XII. of 1891. The portions appearing in italics were added by the present Code. Besides the additions thus noted proviso (c) has been extended, its form under the Code of 1882 being "the materials of houses and other buildings belonging to and occupied by agriculturists," and proviso (h) has been added.

"Goods."—Spears and daggers are goods.(2)

"Money."—Money paid into Court as the pre-emptive price by the holder of a decree for pre-emption is not attachable by a creditor of such decree-holder; (3) nor is compensation-money payable to a mortgagor in the hands of a Collector attachable in execution of a mortgage decree, as the mortgagee should himself have applied for compensation.(4)

"Debts."—A debt must be a perfected and absolute debt, not merely a sum of money which may or may not become payable at some future time, or the payment of which depends upon contingencies which may or may not happen; it must at least be an existing debt, though it may be payable on a future date; (5) it must be specific, existing and definite.(6) Debts are payable at present or in the future, and in England are called "debts owing and accruing," and there, not only can an order be made attaching an accruing debt, but also an order for payment of such debt when it becomes payable.(7) A mere claim for unliquidated damages cannot be attached; (8) nor can liquidated damages on a verdict until judgment has been signed.(1) Money in the hands of a garnishee which he is bound to pay is a debt,(2) so is rent that is due; (3) but claims over which no Court in British India has jurisdiction are not debts liable to be attached, but the mere circumstance that the garnishee is at the time of the application for execution beyond the limits of British India would not of itself render the debt not liable to be attached.(4) A gratuity sanctioned by a Railway Company, the money being in the hands of its paymaster, is not a debt, and cannot be attached, as the gift is not complete; (5) but a monthly allowance given in payment of an antecedent debt is attachable, and an attachment may be made of half the monthly allowance when 3 weeks have expired, inasmuch as 3 weeks of the allowance had become an existing debt though payable on a future date.(6) Money due by an agent or a vendee to his principal or vendor is a debt, and may be attached, and it is not necessary that the exact amount due should be ascertained prior to attachment,(7) but a vendor's right or interest in the balance of purchase money of immoveable property payable on execution of a conveyance is not a debt so long as the conveyance remains unsigned.(8) The salary of a private person is not attachable until it becomes due and is an existing debt.(9) It was questionable whether arrears of interest due on Government Promissory Notes was attachable.(10) A decree can be attached,(11) but a decree for money, though a judgment debt, is not liable to sale in execution, and sect. 273 of the former Code (corresponding with O. XXI. r. 53 of the present Code) provide the procedure in execution.(12)

"Government securities."—Money or other security deposited by the judgment-debtor with a Railway Company as security for the performance of his duties is attachable subject to the lien of the Railway Company, but not saleable until the deposit is at the disposal of the judgment-debtor freed from such lien.(13)

"All other saleable property."—As regards partnership property, it was held that it could not be attached and removed from the possession of the partners in execution of a decree against only one of the partners; (14) nor could one partner attach the interest of another partner in the partnership business in the hands of a Receiver,(1) and debts due from one partner to another were not attachable.(2) The share of a partner in the partnership in the hands of another partner might be attached, which should be done by prohibitory order,(3) and even the sale in execution of the interest of one partner, in a partnership dissolved by the death of his father and co-partner, was good; (4) but where the interest attached and sold was in a subsisting partnership, the purchaser could sue for dissolution and accounts.(5) The effect of these decisions have been partially codified in O. XXI. r. 49. The interest of an undivided father, a member of a Mitakshara family, can be attached and sold. This is the law in Bengal, Madras, Allahabad and Bombay. But the purchaser merely acquires the right to compel a partition as against the other co-sharers of the judgment-debtor.(6) The interest of a son,(7) and of any other member of the joint family, is in the same position; (8) even that of a grandson in the lifetime of his father and grandfather.(9) And property in the hands of a son or other descendant which is liable under Hindu law for the payment of the debt of a deceased ancestor in respect of which a decree has been passed shall be deemed to be the property of the deceased.(10) The equity of redemption in mortgaged property can be attached and sold in execution of a decree against the mortgagor,(11) but not if the person applying for attachment and sale is also the mortgagee.(12) Mortgaged property may be attached but cannot be sold without a suit by the mortgagee under sect. 67 of the Transfer of Property Act.(13) Property is attachable even though it cannot be brought to sale without suit.(14) A tenant's hereditary and beneficial interest in property can be attached and sold,(15) but an interest in an occupancy tenure, which is not transferable by custom or usage, is not saleable in execution, save for rent under the Bengal Tenancy Act.(16) A judgment-debtor has a saleable interest in land upon which he was permitted to erect a mud house and occupy it for forty years, without any reservation by the landlord that he could be ousted, but for which he paid rent.(17) The right to get back from the donee certain lands reserved to the judgment-debtor

by a deed of gift is transferable and therefore attachable; (1) so also is a life interest in trust funds in the hands of the Official Trustee; (2) but property in the hands of the Receiver of the High Court cannot be proceeded against by attachment in the Mofussil, but the High Court can order attachment and direct the Receiver to sell the interest of the judgment-debtor.(3) Property of which the judgment-debtor had been in possession for 12 years after he had filed his petition in insolvency was attachable, his title being by adverse possession.(4) Property the subject of an existing suit is attachable, but in such a case the Court would order the sale at the fittest and most proper time.(5) A decree also is attachable.(6) The right to manage a religious trust is not attachable,(7) nor the right to officiate at worship or to receive the offerings at a shrine; (8) nor can voluntary offerings which may in future be made to an idol, as being entirely uncertain.(9) So also a thing utterly incapable of being estimated or valued, such as "all the claims of Ramnath against all his debtors," cannot be attached.(10) The doors and window shutters of a pucca building cannot be separately attached, as they formed part of immoveable property.(11) Trees growing on the sir land of an ex-proprietary tenant under sect. 7 of Act XII. of 1881 (N.W.P. payable to an auctioneer by purchasers of goods entrusted to him for auction, except as to such amount as the judgment-debtor had a disposing power exercisable for his own benefit.(1) When the judgment-debtor contracted to lay down a pavement for B and deposited materials for the work and received an advance from B equal to the value, the materials vested in B and could not be attached.(2) The corpus of trust property in the hands of a trustee cannot be attached; (3) nor an insolvent's property vested in the Official Assignee; (4) nor land assigned to a widow by way of maintenance with a proviso against alienation; (5) nor land assigned in lieu of maintenance without any mention of such proviso, as coming under clause (n) of this section; (6) but land let under a lease prohibiting the lessee assigning the property either by sale or gift is attachable; (7) so is a donee's share in property given with a proviso that it should be held impartible.(8) Joint family property is attachable in execution of a decree against the father, so as to affect the interests of his sons, unless the sons can show that their shares were not answerable for the decree.(9) In Madras, the attachment of the interest of an undivided member in a joint property in execution of a decree on a personal debt against him, constitutes a valid charge in favour of the judgment-creditor and prevents the accrual to the other coparceners of the right of survivorship on the death of the judgment-debtor pending attachment.(10) The income of property subject to a restraint upon anticipation accruing due after the date of the judgment cannot be attached in execution of a decree against the separate property of a married woman.(11)

"Necessary wearing-apparel."—This was the effect of a Bombay High Court decision in 1872.(12) A mangalsutra or necklace worn by a married woman during the lifetime of her husband and never removed, is exempt (13) (and see now amendment); so are the clothes, equipment and arms of a person subject to the Indian Marine Act; (14) so is the stridhan property of a Hindu wife, when execution is sought of a decree against her husband.(15) Property in zenanas is not exempt from attachment.(16)

"May, in the opinion of the Court, be necessary."—Beasts used in agriculture are not privileged until the Court has declared them to be so.(17)

"Houses and other buildings."—Previous to the present Code, this proviso only referred to the material of houses and other buildings, but it was held to extend to any house in the physical occupation of an agriculturist, or his representatives after his death, for the purposes of his agricultural calling; (1) but "agriculturist" must be construed in its strictest sense.(2) The privilege refers to a house occupied by an agriculturist as an agriculturist, not to his town residence.(3) If the agriculturist does not raise the question that a house is exempt from attachment when it was attached and sold he cannot raise it in a suit for possession by the purchaser.(4) If sold in execution of a decree for rent, other judgment-creditors are not entitled to rateable distribution of the proceeds under sect. 73.(5) This exemption does not prohibit their sale in execution of a mortgage decree if specifically mortgaged.(6) The superstructure of a house belonging to a bhag in a bhagdari village is exempt from attachment under the provisions of the Bhagdari Act (Bom. Act V. of 1862).(7) Where a judgment-debtor, whose house had been attached, claimed the benefit of clause (c), and it was found that he was both an agriculturist and a zemindar, it was held that it was incumbent on him to prove that the house in question was occupied by him as an agriculturist.(8)

"Books of account."—This was introduced as the effect of a decision of the Bombay High Court in 1866.(9) The Court may however direct their production in Court to prevent the judgment-debtor making away with them.(10)

"Mere right to sue for damages."—This is the effect of the decisions of the Calcutta and Allahabad High Courts.(11) The right to bring a suit to set aside a sale is not attachable; (12) nor the right to sue for mesne profits; (13) but if a decree has been passed it may be attached.(14) The right to appeal is not attachable.(15)

"Any right of personal service."—The right of worship of a Hindu idol cannot be sold in execution; (16) nor the right to the surplus profits of shebaitship; (17) nor a priestly office with emoluments; (18) but where a property was bequeathed to an idol with directions that the surplus income was to go to the family of the deceased, the interest in such surplus of a member of the family could be attached and sold,(1) but the vendee would not be entitled to enter on the land.(2) If the surplus profits of shebaitship be sold to the next shebait, his right to succeed to the management would be quite unaffected by execution proceedings during the lifetime of the former shebait.(3) The interest of a servant of a temple in land which he held as remuneration for his service can be attached.(4) A Birth Moha Brahminy or right to officiate at funeral ceremonies, being intangible and impalpable, cannot be attached; (5) so also a upadhikpana vritti (a hereditary priestly office) on the Godavari at Nasik, as being a right of personal service; (6) so is a jotishi vritti; (7) and a vritti cannot be sold in execution, though its private alienation is not absolutely prohibited; (8) but it may be sold in execution if expressly ordered by the decree.(9).

"Stipends."—This includes all pensions of a political nature payable directly by the Government; (10) also stipends allowed by Government to the members of the Mysore family.(11) The stipend of a Carnatic Stipendiary is not attachable.(12)

"Gratuities."—This is not confined to those payable to pensioners, but includes gratuities granted in consideration of past services.(13) A bonus granted in addition to a pension is also privileged; (14) so is the balance of pension unpaid at the time of the pensioner's death.(15) When the decree sought to be attached was passed before the Pensions Act (XXIII. of 1871) came into force, the application for execution was not barred for want of a certificate under sect. 4 of that Act.(16) A Zora garas hak is not a pension and is not privileged.(17)

"Pensions."—A private pension, though not privileged, is not attachable save as to arrears accrued due.(18) Arrears of Yeomiah pension accidentally accumulated are not liable to attachment.(19) Land granted by Government, but not revenue free, as reward for services rendered is not a pension and is attachable; (1) similarly the grant of an annual sum made by Government as compensation for loss sustained by the grantee on account of improper resumption by Government of rent-free lands.(2) In England, superannuation allowance already accrued due to a retired police constable is attachable; (3) and pensions solely in respect of past services are liable to sequestration, though half pay, being to some extent for future services, is not.(4) A zemindari granted (not revenue free) by Govermnent as a reward for services rendered is not a pension.(5) Pensions were exempted by Act XXIII. of 1871. In clause (g) the words "military or civil" have been omitted as being of no value. The word "pensioners" of itself covers every class of pensioner.

"Salary of any public officer."—Under sect. 236 of Act VIII. of 1859, salaries of Railway servants had to be actually due before they could be attached; (6) similarly the salary of a Telegraph Officer; (7) but now the unprivileged portion can be attached in advance.(8) The Calcutta High Court has held that while the pay of an Indian Staff Corps officer, as being of a public officer, comes within the meaning of this section, that of an officer of the Regular Forces, not being of a public officer, does not; (9) and the Allahabad High Court has also held that an officer of the Regular forces is not a public officer and that his pay cannot be attached;(10) but in Madras it has been held that he is a public officer and his pay is attachable.(11) Half the pay of persons subject to military law other than soldiers of the regular forces is liable to attachment.(12) An attachment upon the salary of a Railway servant ceases to be operative after he has filed his petition in Insolvency, and should be withdrawn on notice being received of the making of the vesting order.(13) For definition of "public officer," see sect. 2 (17). Under the Code of 1859, the whole of the salary of a peon in the service of a Mamlatdar under Government could be attached, if it had become due.(14) The remuneration of a Watandar cannot be attached while in the hands of the Collector or other disbursing officer, but otherwise if in the hands of the watandar himself.(15) A khot is not a public officer and the percentage on collections received by him is not salary and is attachable.(16) The salary of a private person cannot be attached until it becomes due and a debt exists.(1) Formerly it was held that money given by Government to its servants, not only for past services but also as a retainer for future services, cannot be attached, and that the pay of a Government official was not attachable.(2)

"One moiety of the salary."—That under the Code of 1882 was half the salary or leave allowance actually payable,(3) but under the present Code it refers only to salary or allowance equal to salary while on duty. In a recent case it has been held that a salary is "property" of an insolvent within the meaning of the Provincial Insolvency Act (sect. 16, sub-sect. 2, clause a), by which provision, read with this section, the amount of the appropriation of the income of a public officer for the benefit of his creditors has been fixed.(4)

"Pay and allowances."—Nor is the pay or allowance of a person subject to the Indian Marine Act, below the position of a gazetted officer, liable to attachment.(5)

"Wages of labourers and domestic servants."—Labourers are persons who earn their daily bread by personal, manual labour or in occupations which require little or no art, skill, or previous education. Their wages may depend on the amount they do.(6) For what is included in domestic servant, see cases noted.(7) In England the attachment by any Court of Record or inferior Court of the wages of any servant, labourer, or workman was abolished in 1870.(8)

"An expectancy of succession."—This includes the right of a reversioner to succeed on the death of a Hindu widow if he happen to survive her (9) Also the life interest in the residue of the property of a testator ascertainable after full administration; (10) or a son's interest in his father's estate which was bequeathed to his mother for life; (11) or the life interest which a judgment-debtor would be entitled to in an estate after the payment of certain charges, cannot be sold in execution.(12) Where however a Mahomedan by deed granted property to his wife on condition that if she had a child by him, the grant should be a perpetual mokurruri, and if no child, then a life mokurruri with remainder to the settlor's two sons, the interest of one of such sons was attachable; (13) so is the interest of a person who makes a gift of land to a Hindu widow for her maintenance, such interest being a vested interest in the land.(14)

"Right to future maintenance."—The mere right to future maintenance cannot be attached.(7) This includes land assigned to a widow in lieu of maintenance,(8) but without any right of alienation.(9) The right of a Hindu widow to reside in her husband's family house is a purely personal right and cannot be attached under this section.(10) Formerly, the Court might order the party chargeable with the payment of an instalment of maintenance about to become due not to pay and the judgment-debtor not to receive, so that it be paid either to such person as the Court should direct or that an arrangement under sect. 268 (O. XXI. r. 46) for its collection or administration be made.(11) This, however, has not been the practice since.(12) An annuity given by will, not by any right of maintenance, but out of the testator's bounty, is attachable; (13) so are arrears of maintenance already accrued due.(14) The income of a fund in hands of trustees payable half yearly to the judgment-debtor cannot be attached after the last payment has been made and before the next is payable, there being no debt "owing or accruing;" (15) but under the Code of 1859, an annuity charged on an estate could be attached at the instance of the person by whom it was then payable, he having inherited the estate from the grantor of the annuity;(16) so can maintenance charged by deed on the grantor's property and recoverable by suit on non-payment; (17) also, in execution of a mortgage decree, the right to receive an allowance assigned to the judgment-debtor's deceased wife in lieu of her share of landed property and inherited by him from her and mortgaged by him.(1) So where a person sells property in consideration of a payment down and an annuity, the annuity is attachable even where the purchaser is the Court of Wards.(2) But the income of property belonging to a married woman, subject to a restraint on anticipation accruing due after the date of a decree against such married woman's separate property under sect. 8 of the Married Woman's Property Act, is not liable to attachment in execution of such decree.(3) An hereditary grant of an allowance of paddy out of the melwaram of certain land is not a right to future maintenance.(4) It has been recently held that this exemption of a right to future maintenance does not affect property or an interest in property which was granted for maintenance, and that thus the crop standing on land allotted to a widow for maintenance can be attached.(5) A distinction has been recognized between a right to receive money for purposes of maintenance properly so called, and a right or interest in property which forms a fund or estate out of which an annuity is paid to the grantee;—the former is a personal right and inalienable, the latter can be alienated. Where an appellant conveyed his estate to his son, but retained a right to receive from him a certain sum annually, it was held that this was not a right to future maintenance, but a valuable interest in the property.(6)

Partial exemption of agricultural produce.

61. The Local Government, with the previous sanction of the Governor General in Council, may, by general or special order published in the local official Gazette, declare that such portion of agricultural produce, or of any class of agricultural produce, as may appear to the Local Government to be necessary for the purpose of providing until the next harvest for the due cultivation of the land and for the support of the judgment-debtor and his family shall, in the case of all agriculturists or of any class of agriculturists, be exempted from liability to attachment or sale in execution of a decree.

Attachment of agricultural produce."—See O. XXI. rr. 44 and 45. These provisions, which in the original Bill affected "growing crops" only, have been extended to all "agricultural produce." While it has been considered that the Court should attach such produce, which will now in all cases be treated as moveable property, by taking it into its possession and custody: at the same time, the procedure relating to the "actual seizure" of moveables cannot be applied, in its entirety, to a growing crop, and, having regard to the special provisions contained in O. XXI. r. 74 with respect to the sale of "agricultural produce," considerable objection has been deemed to exist against allowing such produce to be ordinarily removed on attachment. In these circumstances, in order to give proper effect to O. XXI. r. 74, it has been enacted by O. XXI. r. 44, post, that attachment should be effected by affixing a notice in situ on the field or threshing-floor and also, by way of greater caution, on the judgment-debtor's ordinary place of residence. To meet special cases of persons not residing in the actual neighbourhood, under the special orders of the Court, affixture on the house in which the judgment-debtor carries on business, or personally works for gain, or in which he is known to have last resided or personally worked for gain, is allowed.

"Agricultural produce."—The original proposal was to authorize the Court only to declare a fixed proportion of any growing crop to be exempted, but it was universally considered impracticable. It has been considered to be clear that the amount to be exempted, not merely of growing crops but of all "agricultural produce," must depend upon the circumstances of each particular case. As a matter of working practice, the original proposal to treat a proportion of growing crops as free from liability to attachment and sale could not be conveniently carried into effect. It was therefore proposed that the growing crop, as such, should be attached, but that the proportion to be exempted should, when ascertained, be "released from attachment," and should be free from liability to sale. Subsequently, however, the words "be exempted from liability to attachment or sale in execution of a decree" were substituted for the words "be released from attachment and shall be free from liability to sale in execution of a decree," in order, it was said, to make it clear that the exemption extends to produce which has been hypothecated. The provisions of O. XXI. r. 44 authorizing the judgment-debtor to attend to his crop while under attachment, were thought sufficient to prevent any hardship arising from this procedure. The proviso, originally appended to the draft of this section by way of greater caution, saving any first charge which by any law is vested in the Government for the recovery of revenue, or in a landholder for the recovery of rent, has been omitted, because it was considered that the special and local enactments, by which the first charges in favour of rent or revenue are created, are sufficiently safeguarded by sect. 3, ante.

[s. 271.] 62. (1) No person executing any process under this Code directing or authorizing seizure of moveable property shall enter any dwelling-house after sunset and before sunrise.

Seizure of property in dwelling-house.

(2) No outer door of a dwelling-house shall be broken open unless such dwelling-house is in the occupancy of the judgment-debtor and he refuses or in any way prevents access thereto, but when the person executing any such process has duly gained access to any dwelling-house, he may break open the door of any room in which he has reason to believe any such property to be.

(3) Where a room in a dwelling-house is in the actual occupancy of a woman who, according to the customs of the country, does not appear in public, the person executing the process shall give notice to such woman that she is at liberty to withdraw; and, after allowing reasonable time for her to withdraw and giving her reasonable facility for withdrawing, he may enter such room for the purpose of seizing the property, using at the same time every precaution, consistent with these provisions, to prevent its clandestine removal.

Seizure of property.—This section, save for the first sentence, corresponds with sect. 271 of Act X. of 1877, with the exception that in that Act the words "house or other building" were used instead of "dwelling-house." The first sentence was added by Act XIV. of 1882. According to that Act, sub-clause (2) commenced with the words "or shall break open any outer door of a dwelling-house" instead of the words in italics, while sub-clause (3) commenced "Provided that if the room be" instead of "Where a room in a dwelling-house," while the word "break" in sub-clause (2) has been substituted for "unfasen and." The second sub-clause has been amended to bring it into line with sect. 55, ante.

"Any outer door."—It was formerly held that he might break open the door of a shop; (1) or remove locks on the door of a golah and put on other locks for safe custody.(2) Under the earlier Codes, which prohibited the breaking open of any outer door of a dwelling-house, it was held the privilege extended to an out-house or other office annexed to the dwelling-house but not to a building, such as a storehouse or barn, standing at a distance and not forming parcel of it.(3) By the amendment introduced by the present Code the judgment-debtor's refusal to grant access to his dwelling-house justifies the person executing to break open any outer door, that is, any outer door of the dwelling-house of the defendant but not of the house of a stranger.

"Break open."—A person executing a process for attachment of moveables, having gained access to the house, was held to have a right to remove the lock from the door of a room in which he had reasonable ground for supposing moveable property was lodged.(4) A bailiff who breaks the doors of a third person in execution of a decree against the judgment-debtor is a trespasser if it turns out that the person or goods of the debtor are not in the house.(5)

"Actual occupancy of a woman."—This provision does not apply to the arrest of a purdanasheen woman.(6) determine any claim thereto and any objection to the attachment thereof shall be the Court of highest grade, or, where there is no difference in grade between such Courts, the Court under whose decree the property was first attached.

(2) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to invalidate any proceeding taken by a Court executing one of such decrees.

Attachment under several decrees.—This section is the same as sect. 285 of Act X. of 1877, save that the words "is under attachment" have been substituted for "has been attached" and sub-clause (2) added by the present Code. It only applies to cases of attachment and not to sales.(1) It is doubtful if it applies to immoveable property; (2) but the Madras High Court has held that it does.(3) It only applies where the Courts are all either Civil Courts or Revenue Courts and not to cases of conflict between Civil and Revenue Courts.(4)

"Decrees of more Courts than one."—This section does not apply where there is not more than one existing attachment. Thus where in execution of a mortgage decree of the first mortgagee the Munsif attached, and then the Subordinate Judge attached and sold in execution of a decree of the second mortgagee, the subsequent sale by the Munsif was valid.(5)

"The Court which shall receive or realize such property and shall determine."—This includes the sale of the attached property; (6) also the power of deciding objections to the attachment, of determining claims made to the property, of ordering the sale thereof, and receiving the sale proceeds, and of providing for their distribution under sect. 73.(7) It has been held that the words "claim thereto and any objection to the attachment" refer to claims and objections of a sort which can be summarily decided in execution-proceedings.(8)

"Shall be the Court of highest grade."—It was held under the former Code that this does not take away the jurisdiction of the inferior Court, and its proceedings in contravention would be vitiated only where there had been notice of the proceedings in the superior Court; (9) but if there were notice, a sale by the inferior Court would be bad.(10) Thus where sales were held by the Subordinate Judge and the Small Cause Court (the latter having notice of the former's attachment) on the same day, it was held that the purchaser at the Subordinate Judge's sale had the better title.(10)

So where a house attached by a Subordinate Judge was attached and sold by a Munsif and subsequently sold by the Subordinate Judge, the Munsif's sale was invalid; (1) but where property is sold by an inferior Court by mistake (due to its not having received notice of the proceedings in the superior Court) the sale should not be set aside, but the superior Court should adopt the sale and distribute the assets.(2) The Calcutta High Court, following this last case and dissenting from the two Allahabad and the Madras cases just referred to (but apparently overlooking the question of notice), held that where the first Munsif's Court attached property, and thereafter the second Munsif's Court attached and sold the same property, the sale was valid though the two Courts were of the same grade.(3) The Bombay High Court then held (the question of notice not being mentioned) that where the second Subordinate Judge attached and sold property which, however, was attached by the first Subordinate Judge before the sale, the sale was valid.(4) So where the Munsif attached and sold, while an attachment subsisted of the Subordinate Judge, the Calcutta High Court held the sale was valid, this section being merely one for procedure to prevent different claims arising out of attachment and sale by different Courts.(5) Where the same property has been attached by two Courts of different grades, a sale by the Court of lower grade is not less invalid because it was ignorant of the attachment by the Court of higher grade, all the rulings of the Allahabad High Court being this way, though opposed to the rulings of Madras and Bombay.(6) The Calcutta High Court has recently held that where the same property is under attachment by two Courts of different grades, a sale effected by the Court of a lower grade is not a nullity.(7) The fact that prior to the attachment by the superior Court, proceedings subsequent to attachment had been taken by the inferior Court, was held not to affect the operation of this section.(8) Again, where a Subordinate Judge made an order for attachment before judgment, which became operative on a decree being subsequently obtained, after attachment, but the day before sale, by a Munsif, and thereupon the Subordinate Judge called for the Munsif's record for the purpose of making a rateable distribution, held the Munsif had no power to distribute the sale proceeds amongst the decree-holders in his Court; but no question as to the validity of the sale was raised in the second clause.(9) be regarded as of a higher grade than a Court of Small Causes.(1) Where there is a conflict between a Civil Court and a Revenue Court, this section does not apply, and whichever Court first sells conveys a good title.(2) Sect. 73 does not require the transfer of a decree to the Court where the process of realization is taking place as a condition precedent to an application under this section.(3)

Private alienation of property after attachment to be void.

64. Where an attachment has been made, any private transfer or delivery of the property attached or of any interest therein and any payment to the judgment-debtor of any debt, dividend or other monies contrary to such attachment, shall be void as against all claims enforceable under the attachment.

Explanation.—For the purposes of this section, claims enforceable under an attachment include claims for the rateable distribution of assets.

Alienation after attachment.—This section corresponds with sect. 240 of Act VIII. of 1859, save that the words "as against all claims enforceable under the attachment" were added by sect. 276 of Act X. of 1877, and that the wording of the earlier portion of that section which ran, "When an attachment has been made by actual seizure or by written order duly intimated and made known in manner aforesaid, any private alienation of the property attached, whether by sale, gift, mortgage or otherwise," has been replaced by the words (except those italicized) down to "interest therein" in this section. The words italicized and the Explanation are new. As to the latter, see last paragraph, post.

"Where an attachment has been made."—The attachment must be effectual.(4) An attachment does not create any charge or interest upon property in favour of the attaching creditor as against other creditors; (5) it only prevents alienation and does not confer title; (6) but under a mortgage decree an attachment supplemented by an order for sale created a valid charge on the share of a Mitakshara co-parcener who died thereafter.(7) It has been held that this section includes an attachment before judgment in a suit which is subsequently decreed.(8) But in a recent case in the Bombay High Court where attachment before judgment had been obtained against a Mitakshara co-parcener and he died before execution, it was held that execution could not be granted, since the other co-parcener's right by survivorship defeated such attachment.(1) If no attachment were made but the property advertised for sale and the judgment-debtor incumbered the property, the decree-holder could sell the property subject to the incumbrances which were not collusive,(2) for a debtor may, although unsatisfied decrees are outstanding against him, prior to attachment, make an alienation for adequate consideration or give a preference to a particular creditor over others notwithstanding that it may defeat an anticipated execution.(3) When an order for attachment was made but was not executed and the property was sold in execution, an alienation after the order of attachment was good as against the execution purchaser.(4) Failure to affix a copy of the notice in the Court House under sect. 268 (O. XXI. r. 46), renders the attachment invalid as against a subsequent assignment.(5) So where the copy was not posted in the Court House or sent to or posted in the office of the Collector,(6) or where the wrong property was described in the application and in the order for attachment,(7) or where the prohibitory notice was not issued and published, the attachment was not such as was required by this section ; (8) but the question of the non-observance of the formalities of attachment cannot be raised for the first time on appeal to the Privy Council.(9) The invalidation of a private transfer made pending an attachment of the property transferred only results from a subsisting attachment. An attachment ceases to be operative from the moment money is paid into Court, or at the latest from the time satisfaction is entered.(10)

"Private Transfer."—These are alienations which, if permitted, would defeat claims legally enforceable under the attachment,(11) and so far as they prejudice the execution-creditor they are void.(12) They include a zar-i-peshgi lease and also an ordinary agricultural lease,(13) and a sale after attachment to the mortgagee under a mortgage executed before attachment (14) as also an assignment of a Hindu widow's life interest in the profits of immoveable property left her by her husband's will; (15) but the consent of a Mahomedan heir to a bequest by a Mahomedan of more than one-third of his estate is not an alienation under this section,(16) nor the vesting of an insolvent's estate in

"Contrary to such attachment."—The former words were "during the continuance of the attachment." A lease prior to the attachment is good; (8) so is a bonâ fide sale even when the purchaser knew that the decree-holder was seeking to attach the property,(9) and notwithstanding that it may defeat the anticipated execution.(10) Prior to attachment a debtor may give priority to one creditor over another, notwithstanding judgment has been obtained against him.(11) A conveyance executed by the judgment-debtor after one attachment has been permanently struck off and before a new attachment is issued is valid;(12) but the striking off of execution proceedings does not necessarily withdraw an attachment so as to make an alienation valid; (13) though where the first execution proceeding was stayed by mutual agreement and a subsequent attachment was considered necessary and was made, a mortgage executed prior to the second attachment was valid; (14) but if a subsequent attachment were superfluous it does not neutralize the attachment already subsisting.(15) Where after the property was by an order released from attachment, a mortgage is valid though on appeal from the order an order for partial attachment was made by consent; (16) but it is doubtful whether a conveyance executed during the continuance of an attachment becomes valid or ceases to be void as against the judgment-creditor, and those claiming under him, by reason of the attachment being subsequently struck off,(1) but this has been so held.(2) If the decree in execution of which the attachment was made be set aside the attachment is invalid and an alienation during its continuance is valid; (3) but on the other hand where an attachment was released and thereupon the judgment-debtor mortgaged the property and thereafter the order releasing the attachment was set aside, the mortgage was invalid.(4) Where, however, the judgment-debtor sold a part of the attached property and partly paid the attaching creditor, who withdrew the attachment, the sale was valid; (5) similarly where a mortgage was executed to pay off an attachment, the decree being satisfied before the mortgage was executed, but the attachment withdrawn after the mortgage.(6) Under the Code of 1859 it was held an alienation made pending attachment was not made valid by the subsequent removal of the attachment.(7) A sale in pursuance of an attachment being set aside does not displace the attachment; (8) nor does the death of the judgment-debtor; (9) even though he be a Mitakshara co-parcener and his interest in the property attached passed to the surviving co-parceners.(10) But it has been recently held that when the attachment is merely one before judgment it will be displaced by the death of a Mitakshara co-parcener.(11) An attachment nine years old in execution of a decree twelve years old in the absence of other information must be assumed to have been removed.(12) A purchase in execution under a decree by a landlord under the Rent Recovery Act of property previously attached is subject to such attachment; (13) so also where the Collector attached under the Madras Abkari Act I. of 1886, a subsequent attachment and sale under a civil decree was subject to the Collector's attachment.(14) A mortgagee whose mortgage was prior to the attachment privately purchased, subsequently to attachment, and whose purchase was void as against an auction purchaser, could fall back on his mortgage.(15) that is, only against the execution creditor and persons claiming under him; (1) and only so far as may be necessary to secure the execution of the decree; (2) and not as against all persons who at any future time may possibly obtain executions.(3) So where the sale was held at the instance of the second attaching creditor and the judgment-creditor had incumbered the property after the first attachment, but before the second, the sale was subject to the incumbrance, even though the first attaching creditor was paid out of the sale proceeds.(4) Where the private alienation in no way interferes with the rights secured by his decree to the attaching creditor it is not void; (5) and if the decree were paid off the attachment ceased and the rights acquired pending that attachment became valid; (6) and this would be so although the attachment were not formally withdrawn; (7) and even if the attachment were wrongly continued to secure payment of subsequent instalments under the decree not then payable, the instalment in respect of which the attachment was made having been paid off.(7)

"All claims" means all legal claims.(8) "All claims enforceable under the attachment" is not synonymous with "the claim of the attaching creditor" as used in the interpretation of sect. 240 of Act VIII. of 1859,(9) but means all claims enforceable under attachments which have actually been made and are perfected.(10) This section is for the benefit of the attaching creditor and of those claiming under or through him, and not for the benefit of puisne attaching creditors whose attachments are laid on later than the private alienation.(11) The Allahabad High Court held that orders under sect. 295 (now 73) did not amount to such attachments.(10) The Bombay High Court held that claims under sect. 73 are claims enforceable under the attachment, and an assignment of monies subsequently realized in execution, pending attachment, is void as against persons coming in subsequently and claiming distribution under sect. 73.(12) This question has been set at rest by the Explanation to this clause.(13) It was, however, held that if the "monies realized" are the proceeds of a private alienation brought into Court, in payment of the existing attachment on the property alienated, the alienation is good as against creditors claiming distribution under the former section corresponding to sect. 73 after the date of the alienation.(14) See now notes to that section. The attachment must, however, be a subsisting one; if it is removed the alienation made during its pendency is valid against a subsequent attaching creditor, who, if the attachment had continued and the money were realized, might have claimed distribution under sect. 295 (now 73).(1) Where there has been an attachment, followed first by a private alienation and then by petitions for rateable distribution by other creditors, and the attachment is then removed, the subsequent claims to rateable distribution go with it; because they are merely claims enforceable under the attachment if it results in the realization of assets which the Court can distribute.(2) The Bombay High Court held under the Code of 1882, that, notwithstanding sect. 276 (sect. 64 of the present Act), a private alienation becomes absolute even against all claims enforceable under the attachment on compliance with the conditions of sect. 305 (r. 83, O. XXI.), which is an enabling section and qualifies the prohibition contained in sect. 276.(3)

A purchaser in execution acquires the right, title, and interest of the judgment-debtor freed from all alienations and incumbrances affected by him after the attachment; (4) but if he bought the attached property privately he would get no better title than the vendor had.(4) Such a private sale would not however, be bad as being made pending attachment if it were accepted by the decree-holder in satisfaction of his decree and thereafter sanctioned by the Court.(5) There is no inconsistency between this Explanation and O. XXI. r. 48 cl. (2).(6)

SALE.

Purchaser's title.

Purchaser's title.—The Code of 1859 (sect. 259) provided for the grant of a certificate on a sale becoming absolute (that is confirmed) to the purchaser to the effect that he had purchased the right, title, and interest (7) of the defendant in the property sold "and such certificate shall be taken and deemed to be a valid transfer of such right, title, and interest." It did not provide for the date of the certificate. Sect. 316 of the Code of 1877 (Act X.) as published ran: "when a sale of immoveable property has become absolute in a manner aforesaid the Court shall grant a certificate stating the name of the person, who at the time of sale, is declared to be the purchaser and the date of such sale." There the section ended. Sect. 49 of Act XII. of 1879, amending the Code of 1877, substituted for sect. 316 of that Code another section which was in the same terms as sect. 316 of the Code of 1882. Under that Code a certificate was to be granted on the sale becoming absolute (that is under sect. 314 confirmed) stating the property sold and the name of the purchaser. It then provided "such certificate shall bear the date of the confirmation of the sale, and so far as regards the parties to the suit and persons claiming through or under them the title to the property sold shall vest in the purchaser from the date of such certificate and not before." All these Codes agreed in this, that confirmation was necessary to make a sale absolute, and that when a sale became thus absolute a certificate was to be granted to the purchaser.

Questions of difficulty formerly arose as to the following points, viz., whether it was the sale or certificate which conferred title; the date when such title vested and the necessity for the production of a certificate as evidence of such title. It is not easy to reconcile all the decisions on the points mentioned.

Under the Code of 1859 it was sometimes thought,(1) upon a construction of the concluding words of sect. 259 of that Code, that it was the sale-certificate which transferred the title. The Privy Council, however, pointed out that that section did no more than create statutory evidence of transfer in place of the old mode of transfer by Bill of sale,(2) and the Code of 1877 omitted the words which afforded the ground for the contention that it was the certificate which created the interest.(3) The title became complete upon payment and confirmation.(4) It was in reality in both cases the sale itself, perfected by payment of the purchase-money and the order of confirmation, which passed the title,(5) and in many cases it was held that before the grant of the certificate the purchaser had an interest which was sometimes described as equitable or inchoate.(6)

It is this view which is the ground of the reasoning in Harkisandas Narandas v. Bai Ichha, 4 B. 155 (1879), where it was held that the plaintiff had no right of action because he had no certificate. His right of action was based on the sale, though it might, in one view, be that his suit might fail by reason of want of the necessary evidence of that right; though this might properly be supplied after suit brought, if the certificate was not part of the cause of action but mere evidence of it. and on confirmation the title related back to, and the property vested at, the date of sale.(1)

Assuming, however, that the certificate was only evidence of and was not necessary to pass title, the question arose under the Code of 1859, or at a period when the influence of the practice of that Code had force, whether it was the only evidence and whether a party whose title by purchase was confirmed could uphold it without the production of a sale-certificate. The case-law was conflicting. It was held by the Bombay High Court that for suits on a legal title, as in ejectment against a stranger, a certificate was necessary,(2) but not in suits of an equitable character.(3) It was also held that where the sale was admitted (4) or the question arose between judgment-debtor and purchaser (5) or persons bound by the decree,(6) and apparently in other cases (7) a certificate was not necessary. A lax practice existed under the Code of 1859, under which possession was often given before issue of the sale certificate. Under the Code of 1877, and subsequently, an order for delivery of possession only issued after the grant of a certificate,(8) and with greater regularity of practice in this respect, the importance of the question discussed appears to have gradually diminished.

The Code of 1877 was amended in 1879, and the certificate was required to bear the date of confirmation and "so far as regards the parties to the suit, and persons claiming through or under them," the title to the property vested in the purchaser from the date of the certificate, that is the date of confirmation, and not the date of sale.(9) This provision also gave rise to considerable difficulty, a question naturally arising as to the state of the title between the date of sale and the date of confirmation, which might be and often was a considerable period.(10) It was, therefore, held that when sect. 316 of the last Code referred to the title to the property sold, it meant the full perfected title, which did not vest in the purchaser till confirmation. But this was not inconsistent with an equitable interest arising from the sale. After sale and before

From the date of sale the purchaser had a good equitable or inchoate title to the property sold, and when the certificate was actually granted it made the title absolute and made that title relate back to the date of the sale.(2) Further, the provision of the section was not general and did not apply to third parties.(3) The certificate was as before, only evidence. The Court in granting it had not to determine what property was to pass by the sale, but merely to record an already accomplished fact, and to state what had been sold. Of this the certificate was evidence, but it was not conclusive.(4)

The amended sect. 316 (O. XXI. r. 94 of the present Code) does not deal with this point, but the present section does. According to O. XXII. r. 92, a sale becomes absolute after the expiry of the period for an application for setting it aside or if such application is made when it is disallowed and upon confirmation. And under this section when the sale has become absolute the property is deemed to have vested in the purchaser from the date of sale and not from the time when the sale becomes absolute.

Though, therefore, the certificate bears date the day when the sale became absolute, the title in such case is deemed to have accrued before then, viz., when the sale took place. Where a mortgagee obtained a decree and had the mortgaged property, which was part of a revenue paying estate, sold in execution, and purchased it himself, but the sale was not confirmed till a month later, during which time the revenue fell in arrears and the whole of the estate was sold for arrears of revenue, it was held that he became owner of the mortgaged property from the date of his purchase and was responsible for the revenue payable on it.(1) In a recent case it has been held that a Court has an inherent jurisdiction to amend a certificate in which the property sold was wrongly described.(2)

Though in Baroda Kanta Bose v. Chunder Kanta Ghose, 29 C. 682, 686 (1902), the sale-certificate was still spoken of as conferring title. In a recent case, Barhamdeo v. Ram Narain, 19 C. L. J. 183 (1913), it was held that while evidence could not be given to contradict a sale-certificate granted in 1907, evidence is admissible to explain ambiguous terms in it, and the Court may then determine the question with reference to the whole proceeding. See also Abdul Aziz Khan v. Appayasami Naicker, P.C., 31 I. A. 1 (1903).

The amended O. XXI. r. 94 (corresponding with sect. 316 of the last Code), omits the last paragraph of sect. 316 of that Code.(3) Under the present Code (r. 92), a sale becomes absolute on confirmation.(4) The sale is not complete until such order is made, and it is only after such order that a sale-certificate should issue. The result, therefore, is that though if a decree is reversed after issue of certificate (and, therefore, after confirmation), the title of the purchaser is not affected by the reversal of the decree; if, however, the decree is reversed, and therefore ceases to be a subsisting decree before the sale is complete, that is before confirmation and issue of certificate, the executing Court has no jurisdiction to proceed further in execution by the confirmation of a sale and issue of a certificate held under a decree no longer in force.(5) In short, the Court cannot proceed to complete execution of a decree which has itself ceased to exist. When a decree is set aside all processes in execution are avoided to the extent to which it has been set aside. If no sale has taken place the attachment, if any, goes. If there has been a sale and the decree is set aside before it has become absolute, it would seem that the sale also must fall. It has been recently held that the title of an auction-purchaser at a sale held in execution of a decree did not become absolute if the decree under which the sale took place is reversed at any time before a certificate of sale is granted to the purchaser.(6) If, however, the sale has become absolute, then the purchaser is entitled to a certificate, and unless the purchaser is himself the decree-holder (in which case he is bound by the ultimate result of the litigation), the sale is not avoided by the reversal of the decree. For the setting aside of a decree does not avoid a sale made to a bonâ fide purchaser for value unless such purchaser is the decree-holder himself.

The section merely deals with the date of the vesting of the title. But the question of defect of title and what passes by a sale may be here conveniently alluded to. There is no implied warranty at an execution-sale that the title is good. All that is guaranteed is that the purchaser shall have the right and interest, whatever they may be, of the judgment-debtor; in other words, that the judgment-debtor shall not recover back the lands.(7) And a purchaser under the decree gets a good title against all persons whom the suit binds.(1) The quantity and nature of right and interest existing in the debtor at the time of attachment and advertisement for sale, alone pass by the sale.(2) But in mortgage-suits the right, title, and interest, both of mortgagor and the mortgagee, is passed: the right of the mortgagor as it stood when he made the mortgage, and not merely as it stood at the time of the Court-sale.(3) An auction-purchaser is bound to satisfy himself of the value, quantity, and title of the thing sold, just as much as if he were purchasing the same under private contract.(4) Where the sale is not vitiated by fraud, the only extent to which the purchaser can claim relief is that indicated by sect. 315 (now r. 93, post).(5) In the case of Registrar's sales in the High Court, compensation is also allowable for errors and misstatements as to particulars or description of the property.(6)

Ordinarily the purchaser buys merely the right, title, and interest of the judgment-debtor with all its defects.(7) This was expressly stated in the certificate under the Code of 1859 and is, in fact, ordinarily the case now, though what could have been and what was sold is a mixed question of law and fact to be determined on the whole of the proceedings and the facts of the particular case.(8) As stated ordinarily, the personal right, title, and interest of the debtor passes. In certain cases the estate passes: as in the case of a Hindu widow where the proceeding, though nominally against the heiress, is really against her as representing the estate; (9) or in those cases under the rent-law where a sale passes not merely the right, title, and interest of the tenant but the tenure itself.(10) Leaving out of consideration this latter case, which is subject to certain statutory rules, the purchaser simply gets what the debtor, whether personally or representatively, had, (1) subject to the same bars, such as limitation,(2) and to all equities,(3) liens, mortgages and leases; (4) patni rent; (5) revenue and cesses.(6) His liability may be affected by estoppel. So if a person sells property covered by a mortgage, but, suppressing that fact, obtains the value of the property unencumbered, he may be estopped from saying that the purchaser took it subject to the lien.(7)

Though the possession of an auction-purchaser differs in some points (8) from that of a purchaser at a private sale, yet a purchaser at an ordinary execution sale is in privity with, and the representative in interest of, the judgment-debtor, so as to be affected by the latter's admissions affecting the property taken and estoppels binding on him.(9) An auction-purchaser's conduct in buying is only some evidence of an admission of title in the judgment-debtor, which he can explain or rebut. He is not estopped from setting up a title independent of that based on his purchase.(10)

The purchaser takes the property subject to that which affects what he has purchased, viz., the property. Mere personal obligations not affecting the land do not pass. So it has been held that without notice he is not bound by an agreement to mortgage made by the judgment-debtor.(1) And similarly where A., as surety of B. for a loan, sued C., an auction-purchaser of the rights and interests of B. in a bond pledged for the debt, on the ground that he had purchased the bond with all its liabilities, and amongst them was the amount due to A. by B.: it was held that C., not being a party to the loan transaction, was not liable.(2) He is not affected by a custom binding purchasers by private sale only; (3) nor by a notice of foreclosure issued, after his purchase, on his predecessor.(4)

If between the time of attachment and time of sale the interest of the judgment-debtor is accelerated or enlarged the increment passes.(5) Under the last Code it was held that the purchaser's title to mesne profit or possession did not accrue till confirmation.(6) The title now accrues under this section at the date of sale. Where there has been attachment of decree after sale, but before confirmation, the attaching creditor has a right to have the sale confirmed.(7)

As to whether a purchaser is a party or representative within the meaning of sect. 244 (now 47), (8) see latter section and notes thereto.

Suit against purchaser not maintainable on ground of purchase being on behalf of plaintiff.

66. (1) No suit shall be maintained against any person claiming title under a purchase certified by the Court in such manner as may be prescribed on the ground that the purchase was made on behalf of the plaintiff or on behalf of some one through whom the plaintiff claims.

(2) Nothing in this section shall bar a suit to obtain a declaration that the name of any purchaser certified as aforesaid was inserted in the certificate fraudulently or without the consent of the real purchaser, or interfere with the right of a third person to proceed against that property, though ostensibly sold to the certified purchaser, on the ground that it is liable to satisfy a claim of such third person against the real owner.

Suit against certified purchaser.—It has been said that the object of the section was to prevent judgment-debtors from purchasing their own property at auction in the name of another.(9) The first sub-clause of this section corresponds with a portion of sect. 260 of Act VIII. of 1859. The wording there was "the purchase was made on behalf of another person, not the certified purchaser, though by agreement the name of the certified purchaser was used." This was altered to "the purchase was made on behalf of any other person, or on behalf of some one through whom such other person claims" by sect. 317 of Act X. of 1877, and the same Act added the second sub-clause except the portions in italics. The present Code in the first sub-clause has substituted "any person claiming title under a purchase certified by the Court" (which will include both the purchaser and his successor in title) for "the certified purchaser," and added the words in italics in the second sub-clause. It had been previously held that the expression "certified purchaser" included the person standing in the shoes of the Court purchaser.(1)

It only applies to certified purchasers at sales under this Code, and not to revenue sale purchasers.(2) It is not applicable to a case under the Public Demands Recovery Act (I. of 1895 B.C.).(3)

"No suit."—That is a suit between a benameedar and the beneficial owner; (4) even where the beneficial owner has had previous possession.(5) But where the certified purchaser does not defend the suit against the beneficial owner, the corresponding section in the earlier Code did not bar the suit, and the defence could not be taken by a defendant who was not the certified purchaser; (6) so where the purchaser admitted the plaintiff's claim and stated he had made over the certificate to him.(7) Prior to the amendments made by the present Code there was a diversity of opinion as to whether this section included a suit by a judgment-creditor against the certified purchaser who purchased benamee for the judgment-debtor, the Calcutta High Court holding that such a suit was not barred by this section as it stood prior to this Code, and the Madras High Court and the Allahabad High Court holding otherwise,(8) and the additions now made to the second sub-clause affirm the latter decisions. The section does not preclude a suit by A, whose property was sold against the certified purchaser, who after the sale agreed to sell the property to A.(9) Nor does it preclude a suit by one joint-holder of a decree on a mortgage for a declaration that the property purchased by his co-decree-holder at the auction sale was the joint property of himself and the actual purchaser.(10)

"Against."—Where A in execution sold the share of B, the judgment-debtor, in a house, and it was purchased by C, the son of B, and subsequently A attached and sold the same share in execution, D being the purchaser, a suit for possession by D against C was dismissed as being within this section.(1) This section is not intended to interfere with benamee transactions generally, and a suit by a certified purchaser who purchased benamee, for the property purchased, against the real purchaser who was honestly in possession, failed; (2) and in such a suit the real owner might set up a defence that the certified purchaser was the apparent owner only and a mere trustee (3) So where the assignee of the certified purchaser sued for possession against a third party, the latter could show that the sale was benamee and in fraud of creditors; (4) and a person in possession of the purchased property, when sued for rents and profits by the certified purchaser, may set up a defence that the certified purchaser was only a benameedar on his behalf; (5) even a decree-holder may sue the certified purchaser for the properties purchased by him benamee for the judgment-debtor and of which the judgment-debtor was in possession.(6) When the certified purchaser purchased benamee for A and then conveyed the property to B for A's benefit, the property could, it was held, be taken in execution by the creditors of A, but it was doubted whether they could have done so if it had not been conveyed to B; (7) but that doubt has been set at rest by the additions made to sub-clause (2), and the creditors could proceed against the property even if it remained in the hands of the certified purchaser. The section does not preclude a person purchasing benamee from setting up his title against a person who is not the certified purchaser and does not claim through him.(8)

"Purchase certified."—The section does not bar a suit where the certified purchaser does not defend the suit against the beneficial owner, and the defence cannot be taken by a defendant who is not the certified purchaser; (9) likewise where the certified purchaser admits the plaintiff's claim and states he has made over the certificate to him; (10) nor under the wording of the previous Codes did it preclude a suit against a person who derived his title from the certified purchaser,(11) such as his mortgagee or his heir.(12) The Bombay High Court dissented from this, holding that "certified purchaser" includes the person standing in the shoes of the Court purchaser,(1) and the amendments made to the first sub-clause by the present Code affirm such last decision.

Where the property was bought for an inadequate sum by a pleader of a party in the name of his mohurer, a suit against the pleader and his mohurer was maintainable.(2) It is also maintainable where the purchase is made by a member of a joint Hindu family with joint funds; (3) also where, in a suit for partition by a Hindu son, an outsider purchases benamee for the plaintiff's father with family funds.(4) It is not necessary that the certificate should have been actually granted to the certified purchaser, provided he obtains it pending the suit to impugn his purchase.(5)

"On the ground."—A benamee purchase is not illegal, but if the benamee nature of the purchase is the sole ground, the suit is not maintainable, but otherwise if the purchaser acknowledges that his purchase is benamee and gives up possession or waives his right or restores the property to the real owner; (6) or where he was the manager of the real owner, a minor, and never asserted his right to the property purchased; (7) or where he purchased while the paid agent of, and with moneys of the real owner, who was the usufructuary mortgagee in possession of the property, and agreed to execute a conveyance and gave the real owner the sale certificate and delivery order.(8) Similarly where the plaintiff, having been in possession for eleven years, sued on a title acquired by long possession against the assignee of the certified purchaser,(9) or against the certified purchaser, on the ground of an existing possession which had continued eight years from the time of the sale, the suit was maintainable; (10) but the suit must not be based on the ground of the purchase being benamee, but on some other independent ground. So a suit by the alleged real owner, who was in possession against the certified purchaser for a declaration of title, is not maintainable; (11) nor where the certified purchaser acknowledged that he had bought a portion of the property on behalf of the plaintiff's predecessor in title unless that acknowledgment were accompanied by some act which would operate as a valid transfer of the property. So where the certified purchaser by a consent decree admitted that his mother was entitled to a share of his father's estate, and then purchased, in execution of a decree,

"Purchase was made on behalf of the plaintiff."—The former words were "on behalf of any other person." This does not include an agreement by the purchaser to sell after his purchase; (2) but it does include a case where the defendant as the alleged agent of the decree-holders, who had been refused permission to purchase, purchased the property, and the decree-holders, hearing of the purchase, supplied the purchase-money, ratified the purchase, and agreed to take a conveyance after confirmation of the sale.(3) It does not apply to a case of a purchase made by a member of a joint Hindu family with joint funds; (4) nor in a suit for partition by a Hindu son, to a purchase by an outsider benamee for his, the plaintiff's, father with family funds.(5) Nor does it apply to a case where the person setting up the benamee character of the purchaser does not claim under the certified purchaser or the alleged real purchaser. So the purchaser in execution of a mortgage decree may prove that the certified purchaser of the interest of one of the mortgagors in a sale in execution made subject to the mortgage was benamee for the mortgagor,(6) and a decree-holder may sue the certified purchaser for sale of the properties purchased by him benamee for the judgment-debtor and of which the judgment-debtor is in possession.(7) But the Allahabad High Court held otherwise, holding that the question of who the plaintiff might be was not material, and that all suits against the certified purchaser were within the section.(8) The second sub-clause now provides an exception to this decision. It certainly cover suits by the beneficial owner or the successors in title of the beneficial owner.(9) This section contemplates a suit by a person claiming to be the beneficial owner against the certified purchaser and not a suit where a third party asserts the certified purchaser is not the beneficial owner, in a suit by the certified purchaser; (10) nor a suit by a creditor of the real owner.(11)

"Fraudulently or without the consent," etc.—Of course where a case comes under the second paragraph the claim cannot be barred by the first.(12) The earlier portion of the second sub-clause of this section embodies Power for Local Government to make rules as to sales of land in execution of decrees for payment of money.

Sales of land.—This section was introduced into the Code by sect. 327 of Act X. of 1877. The present section only re-enacts the first clause of that section, omitting the words "from time to time" after "may" and adding the words in italics. The remainder of the section formerly ran, "and if, when this Code comes into operation in any local area, any special rules as to sale of land in execution of decrees are in force therein, the Local Government may continue such rules in force, or may, from time to time, with the sanction of the Governor-General in Council, modify the same. All rules so made or continued, and all such modifications of the same, shall be published in the local official Gazette, and shall thereupon have the force of law."

Provisions of Third Schedule to apply.

[s. 320, second and third paras.]

70. (1) The Local Government may make rules consistent with the aforesaid provisions—

Rules of procedure.

(a) for the transmission of the decree from the Court to the Collector, and for regulating the procedure of the Collector and his subordinates in executing the same, and for retransmitting the decree from the Collector to the Court;

(b) conferr*ing* upon the Collector or any gazetted subordinate of the Collector all or any of the powers which the Court might exercise in the execution of the decree if the execution thereof had not been transferred to the Collector;

(c) provid*ing* for orders made by the Collector or any gazetted subordinate of the Collector, or orders made on appeal with respect to such orders, being subject to appeal to, and revision by, superior revenue-authorities as nearly as may be as the orders made by the Court, or orders made on appeal with respect to such orders, would be subject to appeal to, and revision by, appellate or revisional Courts under this Code or other law for the time being in force if the decree had not been transferred to the Collector.

[s. 320, fourth para.]

(2) A power conferred by rules made under sub-section (1) upon the Collector or any gazetted subordinate of the Collector, or upon any appellate or revisional authority, shall not be exercisable by the Court or by any Court in exercise of any appellate or revisional jurisdiction which it has with respect to decrees or orders of the Court.

Jurisdiction of Civil Courts barred.

[s. 320, fifth para.]

71. In executing a decree transferred to the Collector under section 68 the Collector and his subordinates shall be deemed to be acting judicially.

Collector deemed to be acting judicially.

Transfer to Collector.—This subject is dealt with in these sections, in the next section, and in the third schedule to which the other sections of the last Code have been transferred. The provisions except in one particular are with some verbal alterations the same as those of the last Code. The exception referred to is the necessity for the record of reasons for an adjournment under clause 10 of the schedule. The words "and rescind or modify any such declaration," which appeared in section 320 of the last Code, have been omitted. The last three paragraphs of sect. 320 of the last Code were added to that Code by sect. 30 of Act VII. of 1888.(1) The section provides that the Local Government may frame rules for regulating the procedure of the Collector and his subordinates in execution of decrees transferred to him.(2) The general provisions of the Code do not apply to proceedings held by the Collector for the execution of such decrees.(3) When a notification has been made, the Civil Courts cease to have jurisdiction to execute the decree.(4) It has been held that a Judge can recall a case sent to the Collector.(5) But this has also apparently been held to be not so,(6) or at least doubtful.(7)

Preclusion of Civil Court's powers.—It was proposed to insert the following clause, which, however, has not been done:—"The Court shall be precluded from exercising any jurisdiction with respect to any matter relating to the exercise, by the Collector or any gazetted subordinate of the Collector, of all or any of the powers vested in him in regard to any decree transferred under this section; but it shall not be precluded from exercising, in any other matter, all or any of the powers vested in it, notwithstanding that the decree has been so transferred; and a civil suit shall lie with respect to any act done or order made by the Collector or by any gazetted subordinate of the Collector with respect to which, if it had been done or made by the Court acting within its jurisdiction, a civil suit would have been maintainable." The proper principle has been enacted to be that the Civil Court should be precluded from interfering in any matter declared to be within the Collector's jurisdiction,(1) but that it is not divested of its ordinary jurisdiction in regard to any other matters merely because the decree has been transferred to the Collector; and that a Civil suit will lie (2) with respect to every order of the Collector upon which, if it had been made by the Court acting within its jurisdiction, an action could have been maintained.

Where Court may authorize Collector to stay public sale of land.

Stay of Sale. This section corresponds with sect. 244 of Act VIII. of 1859. The section then commenced, "When in any district where land, paying revenue to Government, is ordinarily sold by the Collector as provided in sect. 248, the property attached consists," etc., and proceeded to provide that "the Court may authorize the Collector, on security for the amount of the decree or for the value of such land or share being given, to make provision for such satisfaction," etc. The present wording of first sub-clause was adopted by sect. 326 of Act X. of 1877, which also eliminated the proviso as to security. The second sub-clause was added by sect. 326 of Act XIV. of 1882. The present Code has omitted the

The section does not apply to a decree which directs the sale of land or of a share of land in pursuance of a contract specifically affecting the same.(1)

"The Court."—That is, the Court executing the decree. That Court should deal with it itself and not in deference to the opinion of a superior Judge who forwards the recommendation of the Collector.(2)

"May authorize."—It is discretionary with the Court to authorize or not as it thinks fit. It is bound to hear any objections made by the decree-holder and any evidence adduced by him.(3) The only indulgence the Court may sanction is to allow the judgment-debtor a reasonable period for satisfying the decree by the temporary alienation of his property. A Court executing a decree cannot vary its terms by authorizing payment by instalments,(4) while the property remains in the possession of the judgment-debtor.(5)

For form of authorization see the First Schedule, App. E., Form No. 25.

"Collector to provide."—Execution cannot be taken out against property under the management of the Collector. As against such property, the time it is under such management shall be excluded in reckoning limitation.(6) Possession cannot be given to an alienee of the judgment-debtor of property under such management, but damages can be awarded.(7)

DISTRIBUTION OF ASSETS.

(3) Nothing in this section affects any right of the Government.

Object and scope of section.—Under the Code of 1859 the attaching creditor was entitled to be first paid out of the proceeds of the property attached and sold, the surplus only being liable to distribution rateably among subsequent attaching creditors: whereas under the Code of 1877 and subsequent and present Code it is immaterial at whose instance an attachment is placed. Every creditor who has applied is entitled to a rateable distribution.(1) The present provisions prevent multiplicity of procedure and that scramble by several judgment-debtors which used to take place under the Code of 1859.(2) The section draws a sharp distinction between attachment and realization,(3) and an attaching creditor is entitled to no priority over other creditors until a sale at his instance has actually taken place.

The object of the section is two-fold. Firstly, to prevent unnecessary multiplicity of execution proceedings; to obviate in a case where there are many decree-holders, each competent to execute his decree by attachment and sale of a particular property, the necessity of each and every one separately attaching and separately selling that property. The other object is to secure an equitable administration of the property by placing all the decree-holders upon the same footing, and making the property rateably divisible among them, instead of allowing one to exclude all the others merely because he happened to be the first who had attached and sold the property.(1)

Where it was contended on behalf of the defendants that, having regard to the terms of the action, an attachment made by the plaintiffs enured for the benefit of all persons holding decrees for money against the same judgment-debtor, and who complied with the conditions specified in the section, that is to say that, provided the defendants have, prior to the realization, applied to the Court holding the assets for execution of decrees for money against the same judgment-debtor, and have not obtained satisfaction thereof, they are, without any attachment of their own, entitled to share rateably with the plaintiffs in the proceeds of the sale, although in the absence of the plaintiff's attachment they could not themselves, after the judgment-debtor's death, have enforced execution against this property, it was held that argument was to some extent favoured by the language of the section, but that it was clear that this section cannot be read absolutely literally. If it were to be read literally, without any regard to its real object and policy, the result would be an absurdity, because the only condition expressly required is the existence of an application for execution made by the persons specified prior to the realization, irrespective altogether of the result of such applications or any objections to them however well founded. But it has been held, and it could not otherwise have been held, that an application for execution which was barred by limitation,(2) or an application which had for any reason been rejected, would not entitle the applicant to share rateably under this section; and therefore it is clear that one must give the section a common-sense construction, and see what sort of case it really provides for. The object of the section being as above stated, it was not desired to enlarge in any way the rights of decree-holders or place at their disposal the proceeds of property which they could not have themselves attached. It entitled to share in the proceeds only those decree-holders who could have themselves attached and sold the property. It was not meant to enable a decree-holder to indirectly get the benefits of an execution which he could not himself have enforced directly. Where the decree-holders are persons who could have themselves attached and sold the property, then, but only then, an attachment and sale by one is correctly described as enuring for the benefit of all.(3)

The provisions of this section show that when property is sold in execution of a decree it is sold not only for the realization of the money due under that particular decree, but of all other decrees the holders of which have applied for execution. When property is sold in execution of a decree it cannot be sold again at the instance of another decree-holder, who may have attached it before the attachment effected by the decree-holder, under whose decree it is actually sold, and when a judicial sale takes place all previous attachments effected upon the property sold fall to the ground.(4)

Where in execution of two decrees certain properties were sold the proceeds of which were sufficient to pay the decree-holders, it was held that on the interposition of a creditor who had not attached, the Court was right in selling a third property, as such creditor would be entitled to share, with the result that it could not be said that by the amount realized from the first sale the decrees under execution were satisfied.(1)

The section relates to procedure only, and was intended to afford an additional facility to decree-holders. It does not interfere with substantive rights or the maintenance of a suit, notwithstanding that a party may not have availed himself of its facilities.(2) On the other hand, failure to participate does not prevent a creditor executing his decree in any other manner.(3)

Permission granted to a judgment-creditor to set off the amount of the purchase money payable for the property sold against the debt due to him under his decree must be taken to be granted subject to the provisions of this section.(4)

The former section was held not to apply to a deposit made by a judgment-debtor under sect. 310A (now O. XXI. r. 89) of the former Code.(5)

An order under this section affects only interests existing at the time. The insolvency of the debtor introduces a new state of things from the date of the insolvency, but as regards sums accrued due prior to the date of the insolvency, the order under this section creates rights which are not affected by the insolvency.(6)

It has been held that sect. 490 (now O. XXXVIII. r. 12) did not empower a decree-holder to share in the distribution of property he has attached; and that though there was no necessity to re-attach, an application for execution was imperative.(7)

Under the last Code it was in some cases held that when a person desired to share in the assets realized by a sale in execution he must apply to the Court in which those assets were for the execution of his decree, and if it were found that property attached by an inferior Court was already or thereafter became subject to an attachment issued from a superior Court, the decree-holder must have applied to transfer his application to the higher Court, if he desired to secure the application of the attached property and its proceeds to the satisfaction of his decree.(8) A contrary view was adopted in the Calcutta High Court, where it was held that this section did not require the transfer of the decree to the Court where the process of realization took place as a condition precedent to an application under sect. 285 (now 63) of the former Code.(1) And this view has been recently adopted in the Madras High Court.(2)

It has been held that a claim or an order under this section did not amount to an attachment,(3) but if a debt was attached no equitable assignment of it was valid against another creditor who subsequently obtained an order under this section.(4) An application does not therefore operate as a substantive attachment, and will lapse, as formerly was the case, when the original attachment terminates.

It is nowhere provided either that an application for distribution cannot be made in the course of execution proceedings taken by the applicant himself, but must be made in the course of execution proceedings initiated by some other decree-holder, or that notice of such an application having been made must of necessity be given to the other decree-holders.(5) After an order for distribution has been made, and before the funds have been actually distributed, it is open to one of the decree-holders to maintain a suit for a declaration that the decree of a next decree-holder is collusive, and that he is not entitled to share in the sale proceeds.(6)

Assets held.—That is available for distribution in execution of a decree. The words of the last Code were assets "realized by sale or otherwise in execution of a decree." Assets meant the proceeds of the sale of the property sold in execution.(7) Moneys paid into Court by sale or otherwise were assets from the moment of their payment into Court.(8) "Realized" meant that property had been converted into or obtained in cash, or some other form available for immediate distribution. There is nothing in the word itself which required that the process should take place as the result of any ulterior proceeding in the course of execution.(9) Assets were realized when the whole of the proceeds were paid into Court.(10) But the word "realized" was however followed by words which showed that the realization must have taken place in a particular way, viz. in execution (1) from the property of the judgment-debtor; (2) the proceeds being "assets" even before the sale becomes absolute.(3) Where therefore assets were realized but not in process of execution the section did not apply; as where moneys were paid by a judgment-debtor under arrest (4) or paid into Court (5) voluntarily, though no doubt under pressure of the decrees; or were realized by private sale of properties attached, the assets being realized under the section, not by the attachment but by the sale.(6)

Although this section is wider than sect. 295 of the last Code, yet the effect of sects. 275 and 310A of the last Code (now represented by O. XXI. r. 55 and O. XXI. r. 89) remains unaltered; and therefore sums paid into Court for a particular purpose under O. XXI. r. 55 are not assets under this section; (7) neither are sums paid into Court under O. XXI. r. 89.(8)

The object of the provision should be to expedite and cheapen the execution of decrees against the same person by adjusting the claims of rival decree-holders without the necessity for separate proceedings. If, however, the property is not sufficient to satisfy all the claimants, the wording of the last Code, as judicially interpreted, held out an inducement to the attaching creditors to settle out of Court with the judgment-debtor at the expense of the other decree-holders.(9) The language of the section has been altered and widened by referring to assets held available for distribution rather than to assets "realized in execution." It is necessary of course that assets in order to be "held" must be realized. It is not however necessary now that the realization must have been in execution as that phrase was interpreted under the former Code. It is sufficient that having been realized (and probably that will be held to be when the entire amount due from a purchaser has been paid into Court) they are available for distribution in execution. must apply before (1) the assets have become so available to the Court holding the assets.(2)

"Court."—Section 285 (now 63) of the last Code contained the words "which shall receive or realize such property." (3) A transferee may apply for execution to the Court which passed the decree (even though the latter may have been transferred for execution (4)), and the Court executing the decree was held to have no jurisdiction upon the application of the transferee who had not so applied.(5) A decree was passed by the Subordinate Judge, and in execution of that decree a sale of certain property was held and conducted by the Nazir of the District Judge; held that in reference to that sale the District Judge had no jurisdiction to pass any order under the provisions of this section.(6) As to transfer for execution, vide ante.

Decree for money.—Every decree (7) other than a decree for the enforcement of a mortgage (8) is, to the extent to which money is payable thereunder, a decree for the payment of money, notwithstanding that the amount of money so payable has not yet been ascertained,(9) or that relief of another kind has also been granted; (10) but a dectee directing the realization of a money claim from mortgaged property and declaring the judgment-debtor to be personally liable for any deficiency in a mortgage decree(11) is not a decree for the payment of money, and a decree directing the payment of money by any person does not cease to be a decree for the payment of money in so far as that person is concerned, merely because it directs as against another person, the realization of a money claim from mortgage property.(12) The Madras High Court has more recently held that a decree directing the sale of mortgaged properties in default of payment of money is a decree for money whether there is a direction to pay personally or not, and whether the remedy against the property is exhausted or not.(13) The section refers to bonâ fide decree-holders, and the Court should exclude persons who are not so,(1) and the Court is competent to determine the question of bonâ fides.(2)

"The same judgment debtor.'—If A. holds a decree against two persons X. and Y.; and B. holds a decree against only one of them, X.; in so far as the decrees are both decrees against X. they are decrees against the same judgment-debtor.(3) Where property belonging to A. has been attached under a decree, and other decree-holders than the attaching creditor have applied before realization of assets to participate in the sale proceeds, and amongst them a creditor who has obtained a decree against A. and B., such latter creditor is entitled under this section to share in the proceeds of the sale of A.'s property.(4) The following decrees have been held not to be against the same judgment-debtor: A decree against B. and a decree against B.'s representative; (5) a decree against Y. as representative of a party's deceased husband and a decree against Y. in his personal capacity.(6)

All will share equally in the surplus after deducting the costs of realization; there being no priority except perhaps in the case of Crown debts,(7) as to which also see third sub-clause, or, it has been held,(8) in the case of rent realized by the sale of the house or building for which it was due. It is only the unsatisfied portion of the decree that ought to be taken into account in a question of saleable distribution, there being no reason why any amount should be set apart in favour of a decree-holder in proportion to any sum covered by his decree which has already been realized.(9)

Sale subject to a mortgage.—Clauses (a) and (b) of the proviso refer only to sales in execution of simple money decrees and declare the incompetence of a mortgagee as such to any share of the surplus proceeds when the property is sold subject to his mortgage; otherwise, if he consents to sell the property free of lien; clause (c) refers to sales under mortgage decrees, but in such a case, as appears from that clause, prior incumbrances are not taken into account, the sale proceeds being distributed in discharge of subsequent incumbrances only.(1) The section refers to cases in which property is sold subject to a mortgage, and not to cases where property subject to an undisclosed mortgage is sold in execution.(2) The Court has jurisdiction to inquire into the merits of the alleged mortgage.(3)

Sale under mortgage decree.—See notes to "Sale subject to mortgage." This provision applies where the decree orders the property to be sold, and not to the case where the property sold was not the encumbered property but other property of the judgment-debtor.(4) It was held that the term "incumbrance" could not be read as "an incumbrance or incumbrances" so as to apply a principle to the distribution of proceeds which would give priority to a subsequent incumbrance.(5)

"Amount due."—The words of the former section were "in discharging the interest (6) and principal money due on the incumbrance."

"Subsequent incumbrances."—The sale proceeds are to be applied in satisfaction of incumbrances according to their priority.(7)

Suit for refund of assets, clause (2).—The scheme of the section is to enable the Judge as a matter of administration (8) to distribute the sale proceeds according to what seems at the time to be the rights of the parties. But this distribution does not import a conclusive adjudication on those rights which may be subsequently readjusted in a suit under this clause. Such a suit is to recover the assets, not to set aside the order for distribution, nor does the order for the reasons stated stand in the way of the suit.(9) The party aggrieved is entitled to bring a regular suit to compel the successful judgment-creditor in execution to refund.(10) The cause of action arises only when the money is paid.(11) And all parties to the distribution should be made parties to the suit.(12) Though an order under this section is not appealable,(13) it may be open to revision (1) as well as to attack by suit. It has been held that a Small Cause Court cannot try a suit for refund of assets paid under this section; (2) but this has been dissented from.(3)

Sale proceeds.—When surplus sale proceeds are in Court the Judge should pay them out only to the party in whose name they stand, or his agent.(4) It has been held that the Court may allow a decree-holder to take out the purchase money before confirmation of Sale.(5) Where property was sold under one decree and the proceeds were sufficient to satisfy both the decrees of two creditors, the property should not, it was held, be resold but the other decree should have been satisfied out of the assets realized by the first sale.(6) If a mortgagee receives any money out of the surplus sale-proceeds of a share in the property mortgaged to him, sold in execution of a decree on a prior mortgage from some of the mortgagors to whom the share belonged and against whom the decree was obtained, he is bound to apply the money to the satisfaction of his mortgage debt, only in case he receives it by virtue of his security and not otherwise, although the payment might be made to him by the said mortgagors in satisfaction of other debts due to him from them.(7)

PART IV.

SUITS IN PARTICULAR CASES.

SUITS BY OR AGAINST THE GOVERNMENT OR PUBLIC OFFICERS IN THEIR OFFICIAL CAPACITY.

79. (1) Suits by or against the Government shall be instituted by or against the Secretary of State for India in Council. [s. 416.]

Suits by or against Government.

(2) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to limit or otherwise affect any information exhibited by the Advocate General in exercise of the power declared by section 111 of the East India Company Act, 1813.

Suits.—This is sect. 416 of the last Code. Sects. 417–421 are now rr. 2–6 of O. XXVII., the first rule of that Order, dealing with pleadings, being new. Sect. 422 is now r. 27 of O. V. Sect. 423 is r. 7 of O. XXVII. Sects. 424 and 425 are now sects. 80, 81. Sects. 426 and 427 are r. 8 of O. XXVII. Sects. 428 and 429 are now sects. 81 and 82.

The liability of the Secretary of State for India in Council to be sued depends on the statute 21 & 22 Vict. c. 106, for the better government of India, and turns principally upon the construction of sect. 65 of that Statute.(1) Whether a suit will lie at the instance of Government is a matter of substantive law. As regards the Court in which such a suit, assuming it to lie, should be brought, reference should be made in the case of the High Courts to their Letters Patent; in other cases to the various Indian Civil Courts Acts, and to sects. 16–20 of this Code.(2) Whether and when a suit will lie against a public officer is a question

(1) See for a recent decision, in which the earlier cases are cited, Jehangir v. Secretary of State, 27 B. 189 (1902), and others cited in O'Kinealy's C. P. C., notes to s. 416.

(2) Vide ante, notes to those sections, and in particular as regards suits against Government; see those in which the question has arisen whether the Government may [Biprodas Dey v. Secretary of State, 14 C. 262 n. (1884); Subbaraya v. Government, 1 M. 286 (1862)] or may not be said to carry on business [Rundle v. Secretary of State, 1 Hyde, 37 (1862–63); Doya Narain v. Secretary of State, 14 C. 256 (1887)]. Several suits have been decided in which the cause of action did not accrue within the local limits, and in which therefore those Courts could have had jurisdiction only if the Government could be held of substantive law. Judicial officers are protected by Act XVIII. of 1850, but no such general protection is granted to executive officers.(1) None of these matters are relevant to these provisions, which deal with the subject of procedure in a case properly instituted. The statute first cited provides that the Secretary of State for India in Council may be sued as a body corporate, and this section provides that suits shall be so entitled.(2) Where, however, a suit was wrongly brought against a Magistrate, the High Court, on appeal, allowed the name of the Magistrate to be struck out, and that of the Secretary of State for India in Council to be inserted.(3)

Informations.—The power of the Advocate-General to exhibit informations in the nature of actions at law or Bills in Equity was expressly declared by sect. 111 of the East India Company Act, 1813 (53 Geo. 3, c. 155), and kept alive by sect. 2 of the Government of India Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 85), and again by sect. 1 of the Government of India Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 95), now merged in the statute of 1858 already mentioned (21 & 22 Vict. c. 106). The Governor General in Council is precluded by sect. 22 of the Indian Councils Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 67), from legislative interference with the provisions of any of the enactments above quoted. The question was considered whether sect. 416 of the last Code appeared to exclude informations exhibited by the Advocate-General, and whether it was therefore desirable to add a proviso saving such information. And this has been done.

s. 424.] 80. No suit shall be instituted against the Secretary of State for India in Council, or against a public officer in respect of any act purporting to be done by such public officer in his official capacity, until the expiration of two months next after notice in writing has been, in the case of the Secretary of State in Council, delivered to, or left at the office of, a Secretary to the Local Government or the Collector of the district, and, in the case of a public officer, delivered to him or left at his office, stating the cause of action, the name, description and place of residence of the plaintiff and the relief which he claims; and the plaint shall contain a statement that such notice has been so delivered or left.

Notice.

"No suit."—The words "no suit" under the last Code were held to mean what they say, that is no suit of any kind, and the section was not confined to a particular class of suit, such as suits founded on tort and claiming damages.

to carry on business in those limits. See Hukm Chand, C. P. C. 321; Ross Johnson v. Secretary of State, 2 Hyde, 153 (1864); P. & O. S. N. Co. v. Secretary of State, 5 B. H. C. R. App. 1 (1861); Brito v. Secretary of State, 6 B. 251 (1881); Hari Bhanji v. Secretary of State, 4 M. 344 (1879); see also as to jurisdiction, Hearsay v. Secretary of State, 6 A. H. C. And it has been held under the present Code that this section applies to suits of every kind.(1) The object of notice is to give the defendant breathing time, so as to enable him to determine whether reparation ought to be made; and the principle is applicable to any class of suit.(2) The substitution of the words "any act" for "an act" points in the same direction. Notice has, in consequence, been deemed necessary even when the remedy sought was an injunction, and though delay involved in the giving of notice might involve the commission of the wrong complained of before the suit was filed.(3) But the objection for want of notice can only be taken by the Secretary of State, and where no relief is claimed against him it has been held that no notice is necessary.(4)

"Shall be instituted."—That is, commenced. The section says that no suit shall be instituted, not that it shall not be proceeded with or maintained. The language of the section is imperative, and absolutely debars a Court from entertaining a suit instituted without compliance with the provisions of the section. A Court cannot under such circumstances stay proceedings and allow time to the plaintiff to serve the requisite notice, but its only course is to reject the plaint.(5) It has, however, been held that there is nothing in the law to show that in case of any amendment of the plaint, necessitated by the alleged discovery of facts previously unknown to the plaintiff, the Secretary of State should have a further notice of two months, when the relief asked for is not altered by such amendment, and it only embodies certain further material in support of the plaintiff's contention.(6) And where, in an action already instituted against the Secretary of State, a public servant was also afterwards joined as defendant, who, however, was not sued for any act done by him independently of Government, and no separate relief was asked for against him, no notice was held to be required in his case.(7) Further, there is nothing to prevent the defendant from waiving the notice or from being estopped by his conduct from pleading the want of it at the trial.(8) Though the Secretary of State is not a necessary party to a suit to set aside a revenue sale, yet the Government has such an interest in the suit as would justify the Court in adding the Secretary of State as a party,(1) and this section, it has been held, does not prevent that being done.(2)

Public officer.—See as to the definition of this term, sect. 2, ante. The Official Trustee ; (3) Official Assignee ; (4) Administrator-General ; (5) a Collector acting as agent of the Court of Wards, and as such illegally seizing property ; (6) and a Talukdari Settlement Officer, when acting as manager under Act XXI. of 1881,(7) or under sect. 79A of Bombay Land Revenue Code (Bom. Act V. of 1879),(8) have been held to be public officers.

"In respect of any act."—The words "in respect of an act purporting to be done by him in his official capacity" were introduced by Act XII. of 1879 into sect. 424 of the last Code under which it was held that the qualifications "in respect of an act, etc.," do not relate to the Secretary of State. They did not apply to the case of the Secretary of State in Council.(9) This is now made clear by the introduction of the words "by such public officer." The defendant must not only be a public officer, but the act must be done in his official capacity.(10) If not,(11) then the section does not apply. There must, however, be a distinct act by the public officer which is complained of to entitle him to notice, and so it has been held unnecessary where a Collector was made a party not in respect of any alleged illegal act by him, but on the application of the minor's personal guardians in order to protect the minor's title ; (12) and where a Collector was merely guardian ad litem. In such a case the suit is not against him at all, and he defends on behalf of the minor only.(13) To take a case out of this section it must be proved that there was something in the conduct of the Secretary of State which prevented the plaintiff from complying with its provisions.(1)

Notice.—The three requisites to be stated are: (a) cause of action; (b) name and residence; (c) relief sought.

The object of the section being merely to inform the defendant substantially of the ground of complaint, the words "stating the cause of action" should not be construed too strictly or narrowly.(2) In considering the sufficiency of a notice on this point, it should not be read with the strictness with which a plaint should be read.(3) A notice is sufficient if it substantially fulfils its object in informing the parties concerned generally of the nature of the suit intended to be filed.(4)

The name of the intending plaintiff must be stated. A notice given by a party who dies before suit does not enure, it has been held, for the benefit of his representative, and enable the latter to maintain the suit without giving a fresh notice, as the notice in such place does not give the name of the actual plaintiff.(5) Further, the abode of the intending plaintiff must be stated.(6) The amended section adds description of plaintiff. And this applies to all plaintiffs if there are more than one.

Lastly, the relief claimed should be stated. Generally, and as regards all these matters, it may be said (to adopt the language of Pollock, C.B.),(7) it is, on the question of sufficiency, necessary "to impart a little common sense into notices of this kind," and to ascertain whether the object of the Legislature has been substantially and effectively carried out. If no notice has been given, or it is held to be insufficient, the proper course, it has been held, is not to dismiss the suit, but to reject the plaint, and give an opportunity to serve a fresh notice.(8)

"Plaint shall contain a statement."—The portion of this section relating to the plaint, containing a statement that such notice has been left or delivered in the manner prescribed by it, is separate from the earlier portion, which deals with the delivery of the notice two months before suit. It is only when notice is not given that the suit is liable to be dismissed (or the plaint rejected). The suit, however, may be proceeded with, if notice has been given in the manner prescribed, and subsequently the plaint is amended in order to state that fact.(9)

Exemption from arrest and personal appearance.

81. In a suit instituted against a public officer in respect of any act purporting to be done by him in his official capacity—

(b) where the Court is satisfied that the defendant cannot absent himself from his duty without detriment to the public service, it shall exempt him from appearing in person.

Arrest.—A public officer could not be arrested under sect. 425 of the last Code without the consent of the District Judge. "Where the Court is satisfied;" this expression has been substituted for "he satisfies the Court" in sect. 428 of the last Code to remove the misapprehension that the officer is bound personally to satisfy the Court of his inability to attend.

Execution of decree.

82. (1) Where the decree is against the Secretary of State for India in Council or against a public officer in respect of any such act as aforesaid, a time shall be specified in the decree within which it shall be satisfied; and, if the decree is not satisfied within the time so specified, the Court shall report the case for the orders of the Local Government.

(2) Execution shall not be issued on any such decree unless it remains unsatisfied for the period of three months computed from the date of such report.

SUITS BY ALIENS AND BY OR AGAINST FOREIGN AND NATIVE RULERS.

[s. 430.]

When aliens may sue.

83. (1) Alien enemies residing in British India with the permission of the Governor General in Council, and alien friends, may sue in the Courts of British India, as if they were subjects of His Majesty.

(2) No alien enemy residing in British India without such permission, or residing in a foreign country, shall sue in any of such Courts.

Explanation.—Every person residing in a foreign country the Government of which is at war with the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and carrying on business in that country without a license in that behalf under the hand of one of His Majesty's Secretaries of State or of a Secretary to the Government of India, shall, for the purpose of sub-section (2), be deemed to be an alien enemy residing in a foreign country.

Aliens.—This section deals with the subjects of Foreign States, as the following sections deal with such States or Sovereign Princes and Ruling Chiefs as those terms are understood in sects. 85, 86. As to the position of aliens, see cases cited.(1) Alien friends stand on the same footing as subjects of His Majesty. But permission is a condition precedent in the case of alien enemies.

84. (1) A foreign State may sue in any Court of British India: [s. 431.]

When foreign States may sue.

Provided that such State has been recognized by His Majesty or by the Governor General in Council:

Provided, also, that the object of the suit is to enforce a private right vested in the head of such State or in any officer of such State in his public capacity.

(2) Every Court shall take judicial notice of the fact that a foreign State has or has not been recognized by His Majesty or by the Governor General in Council.

Foreign State plaintiff.—A Foreign State may sue subject to the fulfilment of the two conditions mentioned in the provisos. As regards the first, if the Foreign State has been recognized, the recognition is conclusive of the right to sue.(2) The State sues by the name by which it has been recognized by His Majesty. In the case of a monarchy, the public rights and interests are represented by the monarch, and the suit is entitled, "The Emperor of —— v. A," or "The King of - - - v. B," as the case may be. In the case of a republic, the name of the State is used, as "The United States of America v. W." (3) Sovereign Princes and Ruling Chiefs, as those terms are understood in the following sections, may sue, and must be sued, in the name of their States, e.g. "Maharajah of —— v. K." (4)

Nextly, a suit by a Foreign State is limited to the objects stated in the second proviso. It cannot sue for anything else. The infringement of its prerogative right does not constitute a cause of action.(5) The "private right" spoken of does not mean individual rights as opposed to those of the body politic or State, but those private rights of the State which must be enforced in a Court of Justice, as distinguished from its political or territorial rights, which must, from their very nature, be made the subject of arrangement between one State and another. They are rights which may be enforced by a Foreign State against private individuals, as distinguished from rights which one State in its political capacity, may have as against another State in its political capacity.(1) The second proviso takes the place of clause (b) of sect. 431 of the last Code. It was thought that the language of that clause required restriction inasmuch as it appeared to confer on the head of a Foreign State a general power to litigate in respect of the private rights of its subjects. It was considered, however, that the object of such litigation must be the enforcement of a private right vested in the head of the State or in an officer of the State as such, and the language has been modified accordingly. A Foreign State can only obtain relief subject to the rules and pursuant to the practice of the Court in which it sues, and one of the conditions is that, like an individual, it will give discovery.(2)

[s. 432.]

Persons specially appointed by Government to prosecute or defend for Princes or Chiefs.

85. (1) Persons specially appointed by order of the Government at the request of any Sovereign Prince or Ruling Chief, whether in subordinate alliance with the British Government or otherwise, and whether residing within or without British India, or at the request of any person competent, in the opinion of the Government, to act on behalf of such Prince or Chief, to prosecute or defend any suit on his behalf, shall be deemed to be the recognized agents by whom appearances, acts and applications under this Code may be made or done on behalf of such Prince or Chief.

(2) An appointment under this section may be made for the purpose of a specified suit or of several specified suits, or for the purpose of all such suits as it may from time to time be necessary to prosecute or defend on behalf of the Prince or Chief.

(3) A person appointed under this section may authorize or appoint persons to make appearances and applications and do acts in any such suit or suits as if he were himself a party thereto.

Persons appointed to prosecute or defend.—As regards the meaning of the words "Sovereign Prince" or "Ruling Chief," see notes to next section.

This section was not intended to limit the scope of O. III. r. 2, corresponding with sect. 37 of the last Code, and does not prevent the institution of a suit by an independent Prince in his own name and through a recognized agent other than one appointed under this section.(3) The section applies to suits filed in a Court of Revenue under the provisions of Act XII. of 1881. Where Suits against Princes, Chiefs, ambassadors and envoys.

86. (1) Any such Prince or Chief, and any ambassador or envoy of a foreign State, may, with the consent of the Governor General in Council, certified by the signature of a Secretary to the Government of India, but not without such consent, be sued in any competent Court. [s. 433.]

(2) Such consent may be given with respect to a specified suit or to several specified suits, or with respect to all suits of any specified class or classes, and may specify, in the case of any suit or class of suits, the Court in which the Prince, Chief, ambassador or envoy may be sued; but it shall not be given unless it appears to the Government that the Prince, Chief, ambassador or envoy—

(a) has instituted a suit in the Court against the person desiring to sue him, or

(b) by himself or another trades within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court, or

(c) is in possession of immoveable property situate within those limits and is to be sued with reference to such possession or for money charged thereon.

(3) No such Prince, Chief, ambassador or envoy shall be arrested under this Code, and, except with the consent of the Governor General in Council certified as aforesaid, no decree shall be executed against the property of any such Prince, Chief, ambassador or envoy.

(4) The Governor General in Council may, by notification in the Gazette of India, authorize a Local Government and any Secretary to that Government to exercise, with respect to any Prince, Chief, ambassador or envoy named in the notification, the functions assigned by the foregoing sub-sections to the Governor General in Council and a Secretary to the Government of India, respectively.

(5) A person may, as a tenant of immoveable property, sue, without such consent as is mentioned in this section, a Prince, Chief, ambassador or envoy from whom he holds or claims to hold the property.

(2) Venkatrav Ghorpade v. Madhavrav Ramchandra, 11 B. 53, 55 (1886).

"Sovereign Prince" and "Ruling Chief."—In the Code of 1859, the words were "Sovereign Prince or independent Chief," and these were altered in the Code of 1877 to "Sovereign Prince or Ruling Chief," followed by the words, "whether in subordinate alliance," etc. Sect. 433 of the last Code, which this section replaces, was amended by the addition of certain words in the first paragraph, and the addition of the last two paragraphs by sect. 37, Act VII. of 1888. In these words were intended to be included Native Chiefs of India, feudatories, or tributaries of the British Government. The term "Chief" is not defined, but its ordinary sense is a chieftain, or principal person of a tribe, family, or congregation. But the person must also be a "ruling" chief. It is incorrect, however, to limit the latter term to cases of plenary jurisdiction.(1)

Suits against Foreign States and Sovereign Princes.—The Courts of England have, according to its law, no jurisdiction over a Foreign Sovereign unless he submits to the jurisdiction.(2) Before the Code of 1877, the privilege of Sovereign Princes stood on the same footing as the privilege of Foreign Sovereigns in England. What this section does is to create a personal privilege for Sovereign Princes, Ruling Chiefs, and their ambassadors and envoys. It is a modified form of the absolute privilege enjoyed by independent Sovereigns and their ambassadors in the Courts of England in accordance with principles of international law. The difference is that, while in England the privilege is unconditional, dependent only on the will of the Sovereign or his representative, in India it is dependent upon the consent of the Governor General in Council, where it can be given only under specified conditions. This modified or conditional privilege is, however, based upon substantially the same principle as the absolute privilege — the dignity and independence of the ruler, which would be endangered by allowing any person to sue him at pleasure, and the political inconveniences and complications which would be the result. But as the absolute privilege may be waived by the sovereign, à fortiori the modified privilege of the section may be.(3) Where consent has been given, but none of the conditions enumerated in the second clause exist, the suit is not maintainable.(4) The Rajah of Tipperah was held to be subject to the Courts of British India in respect of lands held within it; otherwise not, except in the cases mentioned in this section.(5) But it has been more recently and correctly held that the section, while it provides that consent shall not be given unless (inter alia) the Prince (C.) is in possession of immoveable property within the jurisdiction, it does not permit suits to be brought in respect of such property without consent, unless the plaintiff claims to hold (under the fifth clause) as tenant from such Prince.(1) In some cases, where consent to a suit is required, it is obvious that such consent must be obtained at the outset, as in sect. 2 of Act XIII. of 1868, which provided that suits brought against the King of Oudh could not be "commenced or prosecuted" without consent.(2) It has been held also under this section that a consent given after the commencement of a suit against a Ruling Chief—a consent not to the suit being instituted, but to its being proceeded with—is not a sufficient consent. If the consent has not been obtained before the commencement of the suit, the Court should dismiss the suit, or allow the plaintiff to withdraw it with liberty to bring a fresh suit under O. XXIII. r. 1. Where an insufficient consent has been obtained by the plaintiff, the defendant may, by his conduct, waive the defect, so that, notwithstanding the absence of a valid consent under the section, the suit can be heard and determined on its merits.(3) A suit for maintenance which seeks to have the maintenance made a charge on immoveable property is not a suit for immoveable property within the meaning of clause (c), nor is it a suit for "benefits to arise out of the land" within the meaning of the definition of the words "immoveable property" contained in Act I. of 1868, sect. 2, clause 5. A claim for maintenance is not a charge upon immoveable property.(4) Where consent to a suit for declaration of title to land had been obtained and the plaint had afterwards been amended by adding a prayer for recovery of possession, it was held on revision that the plaintiff, having obtained a fresh sanction for a suit for recovery of possession, should apply for leave to withdraw the plaint with liberty to bring a fresh suit.(5)

The object of these provisions is of a political character, and therefore the exercise of delegated authority is subject to control, and a consent once given or refused, even under a delegated authority, does not exhaust the power conferred. For the Notification under this clause which came into force after April 1st, 1912, see the Calcutta Gazette, April 3rd, 1912, Part IA., pp. 203–205.

ARBITRATION.

89. (1) Save in so far as is otherwise provided by the Indian Arbitration Act, 1899, or by any other law for the time being in force, all references to arbitration whether by an order in a suit or otherwise, and all proceedings thereunder, shall be governed by the provisions contained in the Second Schedule.

Arbitration.

(2) The provisions of the Second Schedule shall not affect any arbitration pending at the commencement of this Code, but shall apply to any arbitration after that date under any agreement or reference made before the commencement of this Code.

Arbitration.—The provisions of the former Code have as a temporary measure been removed to Schedule II., post, which see, as also Preface. It has been held that one effect of the saving clause at the beginning of this rule is to make the Second Schedule inapplicable to references outside a suit and to leave them to be governed by O. XXIII. r. 3.(1) the Collector or by such officer as the Local Government may appoint in this behalf.

Origin of sections.—As to the equitable jurisdiction over charities which existed prior to the Code of 1877, in which this section first appeared, see post, p. 358. It is only necessary to add, that apart from this general jurisdiction, special provision was made for religious endowments by Act XX. of 1863. Under sect. 14 of that Act any person interested might sue, with leave in case of misfeasance, breach of trust, or neglect of duty by a trustee, and the Court might direct specific performance, removal of the trustee, and give a decree for damages. That Act was, however, merely enabling or permissive, and did not take away rights which persons had prior to the Act to bring suits in the ordinary Courts.(1) A person, however, electing to proceed under that Act, can be given only such special relief as that special statute says it may give. If he wishes for any relief beyond that, he should, it has been held,(2) proceed under this section.

This section is in part borrowed from Romilly's Act (52 Geo. III. c. 101), and the decisions on that Statute. The Madras High Court has therefore held that the section should be interpreted in the light of the decisions on that Statute.(3) In other cases, however, it has been considered that the differences between the Act and the Statute are such that the decisions on the latter Statute are not in point upon a question of the construction of this section.(4) As regards the objects with which the section was enacted, vide post, p. 361. The words "or religious" were first inserted in the Code of 1882, vide post.

Scope of the sections.—It has been held under the last Code both that sect. 539 of that Code was mandatory—in other words, that suits of the character mentioned in the section could only be brought in accordance with its provisions and not otherwise; (5) as also that it did not take away pre-existing rights or remedies (6)—and that, like sect. 14 of the Religious Endowments

Act (XX. of 1863), it was merely permissive and enabling.(1) In the latter view, if the suit was one which came within the scope of the section, then, provided that such a suit was, independently of the section, maintainable under the substantive law, either an individual or all persons jointly interested, or some on behalf of the rest under O. I. r. 8, might sue, or, if they so chose, two or more persons might sue without joining the others interested, with sanction, under the provisions of this section. In these cases and as regards parties, the section was only enabling in this sense, that two persons might sue where it would have been necessary that all should sue or that some should obtain leave to sue on behalf of the rest under sect. 30 (now O. I. r. 8).(2) If an individual could sue before, it was held that he could do so after the enactment of the section.(3) If all persons interested joined, they were, it was held, always competent to maintain a suit for the removal of a trustee,(4) and when all parties interested joined in suing or sanction was obtained under sect. 30 (now O. I. r. 8), the jurisdiction of the ordinary Courts as to the removal of trustees still existed.(5) As regards certain persons, it was enabling in the sense that it conferred a new right of suit on persons who had previously none, namely the Collector or such other officer as the Government may appoint, as in Allahabad, the Legal Remembrancer. In the Presidency towns it was always competent to the Advocate-General to initiate proceedings in matters of public trust, but in the Mofussil there was previously no public official who could take action.(6)

Then leaving the question as to who might sue and dealing with the nature of the relief which might have been given, the equitable jurisdiction of the Supreme Court over charities, and of the High Court its successor, the Supreme Court was complete, and no amendment of the law in this respect was required; (7) but the extent and nature of the jurisdiction of the Mofussil Courts was doubtful. In their character as Courts of Equity they gave relief in matters of public trust. Thus, the removal of a trustee from the management of charitable trusts on the ground of malversation was a remedy always available in these Courts,(8) and it is not correct to say that the former section created in this respect a new and special jurisdiction.(9) But there were other matters in which their jurisdiction was doubtful. It was generally necessary that breach of trust should be alleged,(1) whereas under this section jurisdiction may be exercised whenever the direction of the Court is necessary for the administration of the trust, notwithstanding that there may have been no breach of trust.(2) So, again, it was doubtful whether the Mofussil Courts could award under the law some of the reliefs mentioned in the section, such as a scheme,(3) and whether worshippers were entitled to ask for the appointment of new managers when there was a mere case of vacancy.(4) Other reliefs, however, in matters of public charities were commonly granted. So numerous cases established the right of a founder of an endowment, or his heirs, to sue to set aside alienations by the trustee, to recover the trust property for the trust, to enforce the due performance and to rectify abuses of the trust, to remove the old and to appoint a new trustee.(5) In one of such cases also, the Court directed the framing of a scheme.(6)

Similarly it has been held, though the question was not free of conflict, that Hindu or Mahomedan worshippers in a temple or mosque might, apart from suits to enforce some purely individual right, such as that of free access for worship,(7) sue to rectify mal-administration of the trust by restraining a breach of trust, restoring possession to the trust, seeking an account, removing old and appointing new trustees. Every Mahomedan, it has been said,(8)

Where the right is an individual one, the party may sue alone, and is not obliged to proceed under this section or s. 30, or Act XX. of 1863. who derives any benefit from an admitted wagf is entitled to sue,(1) and there is no question of there being any difference in the Hindu (2) and Mahomedan law; (3) in this respect the cases holding that a Hindu has or has not the right in question follow cases decided with reference to Mahomedan law, and vice versâ.(4)

The question then arose whether this section in the last Code affected or did away with rights of suit which existed prior to and independently of it. That it did not, must, apart from judicial precedent, appear upon a consideration of the two following circumstances: Firstly, the Code was one which dealt with procedure. Presumably, therefore, it did not affect or take away existing substantive rights unless it said so.(5) Secondly, the section did not say so. To support the contrary contention, it would have to be read as if the words "but no other person or persons" were inserted between the words "Advocate-General" and "may institute." The Legislature might have prohibited all suits other than those brought under the provisions of this section, but it did not do so.(5) Passing to the case law, which it must be admitted was in a state of considerable confusion, we find that it was held that the right of a founder, or his heir, was not affected by this section, and a suit by them for enforcement of the trusts was one which could be brought independently of this section, under which they are not obliged to sue; (6) though of course they could, if they chose, institute their suit under this section,(7) provided that it was of a character cognizable thereunder.(8) So also it was held that a general manager of a temple was entitled to bring a suit with reference to the special endowment in charge of the special managers, the Court stating that it did not think that such a right was intended to be affected by this section, for if it were, the rights which existed prior to it would be seriously restricted, and it was difficult to believe that the Code intended to restrict special rights of the character in question.(1) On the same principle, such suits as were permitted to worshippers before the enactment of this section have been held not to be restricted by it.(2) This section under the last Code was, in short, enacted to confer on suitors, in cases falling within its scope, an additional remedy to any which they may have enjoyed before. It was as regards such persons cumulative and not restrictive. It further applied to persons who before its enactment had no right to take proceedings for the purposes mentioned in the section.(3) It was as regards the latter mandatory, for it was only under this section that such persons can sue at all. But as regards others it was enabling and permissive. The question then in every case not instituted under this section was: Did the substantive law give a right of suit? If it did, the ordinary procedure applied. If, however, under the substantive law it did not give a right of suit, as to a Collector or to a worshipper (if such be held to be the case), or the Court has not jurisdiction to grant a particular form of relief and so forth, then the suit must necessarily fail as not having been brought in conformity with the terms of an enactment under which, ex hypothesi, it could alone succeed.

But whether the section was generally mandatory or not, it is obvious that no question of this nature could arise unless the particular suit came within its purview. To ascertain this it was necessary to examine the terms of the section itself.

The second clause now makes it clear that the section is mandatory. A suit claiming any of the reliefs specified must be brought under and in conformity with its provisions, or not at all. Any right of suit which existed independently of its provisions has now been expressly taken away where the suit and relief are of the character mentioned in the section. Thus it has been recently held that where a trust is a trust created for a public purpose of a religious or charitable nature (as for instance a waqf under Mahomedan Law) no suit can be brought for the removal of a duly appointed trustee except under this section.(4)

Conditions of applicability of section.—The suit contemplated (a) is

It has been held that cl. 2, "save as provided," gives a choice of remedies, but that a suit brought for removing a trustee with the sanction of a Collector is not bad because the leave of the Court has not been obtained: Venkataraya Charlu v. Krishnama Charlu, 24 M. a representative one, (b) by the persons mentioned, (c) against trustees, (d) in respect of the trusts mentioned, (e) in cases where either there has been a breach of trust or, if none, where the directions of the Court are necessary,(f) or relief of the kind mentioned in the section. If the suit is one to which the section does not apply, then the only question is whether a right of suit exists independently of it. If a right of suit exists, and this is a question of substantive law, then the ordinary procedure prescribed for suits by the Code applies.

1. Representative suit.—In the first place it is to be observed that the section relates only to charities in which the public are interested. The suit may be instituted by certain public officers, namely the Advocate-General, the Collector, or by such other officer as the Government may appoint, such as, according to the N.W.P. and Oudh Rules, the Legal Remembrancer. It is obvious that such plaintiffs can and do sue only as representing the public, and if instead of these public officers two or more persons having an interest in the trust sue with their consent, they so sue under a warrant to represent the public as the objects of the trust.(1) The dispute must be, it has been said, (and will necessarily be if the terms of the section are followed), of such a public nature that the intervention of the Advocate-General or other public officer is necessary to decide if, and by whom, a suit should be brought to establish public rights.(2) It follows from this, that where a person or persons sue, not to establish the general rights of the public of which they are members, but to remedy a particular infringement of their own individual right, though they may possess that right in common with others, a suit will lie independently of the section. The suit contemplated is a representative one, and of necessity, therefore, other persons than those permitted to sue will be affected by it. Under it two or more persons may sue for the benefit of themselves and the rest of the public interested. An objection therefore that a plaintiff was suing to enforce rights common to himself and the class to which he belonged, and that this section did not apply, was, of course, overruled. When sanction is obtained under this section, no leave is required under sect. 30 (now O. I. r. 8). In fact, the section is enabling in this sense that it dispenses with leave under that rule, when but for this section it might be necessary.(3)

In certain cases connected with public trusts there is no question but that a right of suit exists, and has always existed, independently of this section. Where there is a particular injury to an individual, or number of individuals, which is not suffered by other members of the class or public interested in the trust; where these individuals, interested apart from others, sue to establish their own right which has been infringed, and to remedy only the particular grievance of which they complain, then a suit may lie under the general law, either by the particular person whose right has been infringed, or where there are numerous parties having the same interest, by one or more on behalf of the others similarly interested under the provisions of O. I. r. 8. So if there be a trust intended for a class of the public, such as Hindus or Mahomedans, or for a portion of such class, such as a sect, each member of that class or sect is entitled, as of a personal or individual right,(1) to free access to the temple or mosque for the purposes of worship,(2) and to present the usual offerings if any to the Deity and to perform other usual acts of worship.(3) If a trustee, manager, or any other person interferes with such a right, the individual whose right has been so infringed may institute an ordinary suit in the ordinary Civil Courts for a declaration of his right, injunction, and damages. It may be that several persons are similarly situated and interested. But the interest of a worshipper, though it may be a right enjoyed in common with others, is not a joint right vested in the whole body of worshippers and not vested in the individual.(4) The latter's interest is generally an individual one. When this is so he is entitled to sue alone to assert that individual right, and is not obliged to proceed either under this section or O. 1. r. 8, or Act XX. of 1863.(5) If the infringement of the right and the relief claimed are the same, several plaintiffs may join in suing under O. I. r. 1 ; (6) or if the conditions of r. 8 of that Order are fulfilled, he or some may sue thereunder on behalf of himself and others similarly interested.(7) Should, however, the right in any case be a joint and not a separate right, then either all jointly interested must sue,(8) or one or more must sue under r. 8 on behalf of the rest.(9) There is no doubt about the procedure applicable in the case of infringement of a purely

In Latifunnissa v. Nazirun, 11 C. 33, 37 (1884), the suit was held to fall within s. 539, and as regards the applicability of s. 30, it seems to have been thought that the cause of action was not a several one as also apparently in Jan Ali v. Ram Nath, 8 C. 32 (1881). If, however, a right is a several individual one and the suit is brought to assert that right, it is not correct to say that a plaintiff must sue either under s. 30, s. 539, or s. 14, Act XX. of 1863.

private right. It may be that the infringement of the individual right is caused by a breach of trust, as where in the case of an institution for public worship the right, to such worship is obstructed or denied to a person interested in the religious trust. But the right infringed in such cases is an individual right. For instance, though others may have similar and common rights, these may not have been infringed, in which case the individual is interested apart from all others of his class, and the relief to which he is entitled is particular relief designed to meet the necessities of his individual case. Instances such as these do not come within the purview of this section at all.(1) Ordinarily, the nature of the suit and the specific relief claimed exclude any difficulty; but this might arise if the relief sought was not merely the remedying of a particular grievance by damages or injunction, but general administration of the trust. Such relief would not ordinarily be necessary; but should that be the case, it would be necessary to determine whether a suit based on an individual and separate cause of action might claim such relief independently of the provisions of this section, that is, whether a general administration could be obtained in aid of the individual right alleged. Probably such a case could hardly occur, as in most cases where such relief was sought it would be found that the case was one where a public right had been infringed, but if it did it would seem on principle that such a suit would not come within the section. Other instances of the enforcement of personal and individual rights will be found in the class of cases to which reference will be made, where the suit is brought to enforce the personal claim of the plaintiff to be a trustee or to be co-trustee, or to vindicate the right of management in the case of obstruction offered to one vested with and actually exercising the right of management at the date of suit. Where, however, a party is not interested otherwise than in connection with others for whom as well as for him the trust is intended; where the suit is brought in the interest of the public, no special injury distinct from that suffered by the general public having been suffered by the plaintiff; and where the same relief is sought under the same circumstances as those mentioned in this section;—in such cases only is it that the question arose whether the section was or was not mandatory, that is, whether suits of the character mentioned in the section could only be brought with leave in accordance with its provisions and not otherwise, a matter which has already been dealt with.

2. Persons who may sue.—These are either particular public officials, viz., the Advocate-General, the Collector, or such other person (as in the N.W.P. the Legal Remembrancer) as are appointed by Government to exercise the powers conferred by this section.

in England.(1) So far as the trusts are concerned he only represents the public,(2) and is bound by all acts and omissions of the manager which are not in themselves fraudulent.(3) The de jure managers and trustees of a public charity losing their right by limitation to oust the de facto trustee does not confer on the latter immunity from suit on the part of the Advocate-General.(4) He may, in the Presidency-towns, maintain a suit in his own name, or some relators may in such towns, with his sanction, sue.(5) And since the Code of 1877, this section has expressly enacted that the Advocate-General may sue.(6) A Bill filed by one Advocate-General does not abate by the fact that the latter leaves the country.(7) Though the Advocate-General may sue, it is not necessary that he should be made a party either as a plaintiff (8) or as a defendant, although if he be made a party defendant and appears by counsel he will be entitled to costs.(9) He is at liberty to intervene at any stage of the litigation (10) and is entitled to be heard.(11) There was, however, no public officer in the Mofussil entitled to bring suits which the Advocate-General could, and can now, institute in the Presidency-towns.(12) But where the Advocate-General was made a party in a suit brought at the instance of a person, and instituted in the Mofussil, and the Advocate-General employed counsel, he was held entitled to get the costs of such counsel and other expenses of the suit.(13) Where a suit by the Advocate-General at the instance of relators was dismissed, and the Advocate-General did not appeal, the relators who were not parties to the suit were held incompetent to appeal on their own account.(14) other officer, sue. When the suit is brought by such relators the suit is in their name, and not in that of the Advocate-General.(1) Where the suit was filed by only one plaintiff with consent, and the plaint was afterwards amended by the addition of a second plaintiff, the suit was held defective even though the Advocate-General had given his consent to such amendment.(2)

(c) If interested.—The words "an interest" were substituted for the words "a direct interest" by sect. 44, Act VII. of 1888, prior to which it had been held that a worshipper at a mosque had not a direct interest; (3) nor had managers of a temple.(4) The first decision was, however, rightly dissented from, it being pointed out that it was difficult to imagine whose interest in a mosque is direct if the interest of worshippers is not.(5) The effect of the amendment has been to widen the class of persons who are entitled to maintain an action under this section,(6) and it is now clear that persons having a right to worship are interested.(7) But the mere possibility of an interest, or the mere possibility of succession, does not give a right to sue as the interest must be an existing one and not a mere contingency.(8) Thus the representative of the founder or the beneficiaries under the trust may be said to have an interest in the trust so as to entitle them to call for its administration; but a person cannot, it has been held, be said to have an interest in a trust merely because he is the possible successor of the present holder of the office.(9) Officiating priests, as also persons who act as pandas or guides and priests of the pilgrims, have an interest;(10) and persons ex officio concerned in the performance of worship and entitled to maintenance from the temple funds.(11)

tion of the suit should be obtained from the Advocate-General, or the Collector or other officer appointed by the Local Government (such as in Allahabad the Legal Remembrancer), (1) as the case may be. An Assistant Collector discharging the duties of the Collector during his illness cannot grant sanction under this section.(2) The object of such sanction is to guard charitable trusts from abuse, and for that purpose to prevent such proceedings from being instituted for no other reason than because it is known that the costs will be payable out of the charity funds.(3) Where, however, a person has capacity to sue, the motives that actuated him do not affect his capacity and will not by themselves defeat a suit for which sanction has been obtained.(4) The Advocate-General, Collector, or other officer is required to exercise his judgment before giving consent.(5) Where the language of permission indicated that as regards the interest of the plaintiffs the Collector did not exercise his judgment, it was held to be a mere irregularity within sect. 578 (now 99), post.(6) But it has also been held, that the consent in writing must be a specific permission given to two or more persons by name; and that a permission given to one applicant by name "and another" is not a sufficient compliance with the terms of the section.(7) The suit brought under this section must correspond with the sanction, as no reliefs can be awarded which are not contained in the section.(8) It has been held by the Allahabad High Court that the obtaining of sanction is a pre-requisite for the institution of the suit, and that the section cannot be read as meaning merely that the Courts cannot proceed with the suit already instituted until that consent has been obtained, and that therefore if no valid consent is given before the institution of the suit, the mistake cannot be subsequently rectified, unless by means of withdrawal, with permission to institute a fresh suit.(9) The Advocate-General may give consent to the institution of a suit, but not for the amendment of a defective suit.(10) And the Court's action after the institution of the suit in making a defendant a plaintiff has been held not subject to the consent of the Advocate-General.(11) Nor is consent necessary for the amendment of the plaint by mentioning particulars of the breach of trust.(12)

3. Against whom suit may be brought.—The opening words of the section imply the existence of a trustee who is alleged to have been guilty of the breach of trust referred to.(1) The plaint must allege that the defendant is a trustee, and if that is denied by him it must be established by the evidence. Where the plaintiff's case was that the defendant was a trustee of the Mandir in dispute, the Mandir being public charitable property, and that the defendant should be removed from his possession for breach of trust and the Court's direction given as to administration of the trust, it was held that the suit was within these sections.(2) It has doubtless been held that where there is a claim for administration of the trust which falls within the section, a claim to eject an alienee may be joined with it.(3) But the latter claim does not come within the scope of the section, is open to the charge of misjoinder, and this decision has been dissented from.(4) It is on this principle, namely, that the section is directed against trustees, that it has been held that as against strangers it does not apply; (5) such as alienees from the trustee (6) or trespassers.(7) There is no doubt but that claims by trustees against persons who are strangers to the trust, and who set up a title hostile thereto, such as alienees and mere trespassers holding adversely thereto, are not within the section.(8)

But a person who recognises the trust and has assumed, though it may be without authority, the right to administer, and, in fact administers it by virtue of his alleged title as trustee, stands on a different footing. A trustee may be such de jure or de facto. A person who, without title, chooses to take upon himself the character of trustee, becomes a trustee de son tort. He is liable to account for what he has done and received while so acting, and cannot be heard to say for his own benefit that he had no right to act as trustee.(9) Though a trustee de son tort and a trustee of a constructive trust have been used as synonymous,(10) the two are not the same thing. there cannot be both an express and constructive trust in respect of the same subject-matter, a person may be trustee de son tort either of an express or constructive trust. There may be, for instance, an express trust admitted by both plaintiff and defendant. Both may claim to be trustees, though only one under the circumstances can, in fact, have title. If, in fact, the defendant be found to have no title, then he is a trustee de son tort of the express trust. Again, a trustee de son tort of an express trust may become such of a constructive trust. A suit under this section lies against a trustee of an express or constructive trust, and whether such trustee be de jure or de son tort.(1) It does not, however, follow that because the defendant is a trustee a suit brought against him is necessarily within the section. Its other conditions have to be fulfilled. So where a plaintiff sues a trustee, alleging that he is a co-trustee but has been excluded from a share in, and in the profits of, the management, he does not sue on account of any such breach of trust as is contemplated by this section, nor can he be said to require the direction of the Court for the administration of the trust, and such a suit therefore does not come within the section; (2) nor a case of contest as to who are the lawful trustees, both claiming to be such; (3) nor a suit by a person (who has something more than a mere interest in the trust as worshipper or object of the charity) to enforce a vested right to see that certain religious and charitable endowments are managed by a person entitled to manage them, as being the members of a particular religious institution or brotherhood; (4) nor a suit for the vindication of the right of management which was vested in and actually being exercised by the plaintiffs and those they represent at the date of the obstruction complained of, notwithstanding that those who caused the obstruction had been nominated as trustees.(5) In all such cases it will be found that they proceed upon the ground that, though there may have been a trust and trustee, there was no breach of trust or necessity for administration, or the relief sought was not that mentioned in the section, or the right sought to be enforced was of a personal and individual character. Where, on the other hand, administration of the trust is necessary, and relief is sought which is within the scope of the section, a suit will lie against a person alleged to be in the position of a trustee de son tort. So parties who did not themselves claim to be trustees, but alleged that the trusteeship was vacant, might, it was held,(6) sue under this section persons wrongfully claiming to be and acting as trustees for an order appointing new trustees. And where a suit otherwise fell within the terms of this section, a former trustee and a representative of a former trustee were allowed to be added with a view to relief being granted against them.(7)

4. The trust must be a public one.—The section presupposes the existence of a public trust and a suit for the administration, either partially or completely, of that trust.(1) It enables the persons mentioned therein to sue trustees to enforce the better administration of the trust.(2) Where, however, it is said that the section presupposes a trust, this does not mean that the defendant must admit the trust before the section can apply, but that the suit must proceed upon the allegation of the existence of a trust which may or may not be admitted by the defendant.(3)

Private trusts concern only individuals or families for private convenience or support. By public trusts may be understood such as are constituted for the benefit either of the public at large, or of some considerable portion of it answering a particular description. In private trusts the beneficial interest is vested absolutely in one or more individuals, who are, or within a certain time may be, definitely ascertained, and to whom therefore collectively, unless under some legal disability, it is, or within the allowed time will be, competent to control, modify, or determine the trust. A public or charitable trust, on the other hand, has for its objects the members of an uncertain and fluctuating body, and the trust itself is of a permanent character.(4) A trust is none the less a trust for a public purpose if its main object is the support of fakirs of a particular sect.(5) The trust may be charitable, such as for the relief of the poor, or the advancement of learning, religion, or objects of general public utility, or religious, though all religious uses are charitable uses. Though, therefore, the section, as originally enacted in the Code of 1877, did not contain the words "or religious," there is little doubt but that the Legislature intended the section to embrace both charitable and religious purposes.(6) It was, however, held that the corresponding section in the Code of 1877 did not apply to religious endowments,(7) and therefore in the Code of 1882 the section was altered to expressly include religious trusts, in consequence of these rulings and doubts which had been entertained. The contention that, while there exists the special enactment, XX. of 1863, for the proper appropriation of endowments of lands relating to temples, the words "religious purposes" should be considered as referring only to cases where the endowments do not relate to temples, has been overruled.(1)

The public trust may also be either express or constructive. The first are those which are raised and created by act of the parties, and are declared by them either in word or writing. A constructive trust (to which this section also, though not the English Statute, applies) (2) is one arising, not by the act of the party, but by operation of law, where a trustee gains some personal advantage by availing himself, and through the medium of his situation as trustee.(3) It is imposed on such a person to prevent him from holding for his own benefit an advantage gained by reason of the fiduciary relation subsisting between him and others, and for whose benefit only it is his duty to act.(4) So, if a lease were the subject-matter of a public trust, a constructive trust would arise if a trustee renewed the lease in his own name. He would, in such case, be deemed to be a trustee for those interested in the original term. And this would be equally so if the trustee was trustee of right or trustee de son tort. And were there a breach of such constructive trust, by making away with the renewed lease or not applying its benefits to the purposes of the trust, there would be such a breach of trust as is referred to in this section.(5) It has been recently held that where it is proved that certain property has been held for many generations for such purposes as the support of fakirs, and there is no evidence that the property was ever held for any other purpose, the Court ought to presume the existence of a charitable or religious trust within the meaning of these sections.(6)

Where it was objected that the section was limited in its action to suits relating to property, and that its operation could not be extended to spiritual offices, it was held to be applicable where it is sought to remove the trustee from a religious office, if, as the holder of such office, he is called upon to exercise business functions either as trustee or as manager of temple funds and properties, and thus necessarily possesses civil rights and consequent liabilities.(7)

5. There must be a breach of trust or necessity for directions.—Nextly, assuming that there is a trust and trustee, it must be ascertained whether there is a breach of trust. If not, then the direction of the Court must be required for the administration of the trust. A breach of trust is not necessary. It is sufficient if there be a public trust, and the direction of the Court is considered necessary for its administration.(1) If there be neither a breach of trust (2) nor necessity for such directions,(3) then the section does not apply. As to evidence of breach of trust and the grounds which will justify removal for breach of trust, see cases below.(4)

6. The suit must be for relief of the kind mentioned.—Lastly though some or even all of the other elements stated in the section are found to exist, a suit will not be within it unless the relief sought therein is that which is expressly or impliedly mentioned in the section.(5) No difficulty arises as regards the relief expressly mentioned in clauses (a) to (g). Contention has ever taken place as to what may be held to be included in the words "such further or other relief as the nature of the case may require."

The general clause ought to be read with the five preceding specified clauses; and the nature of the relief which may be properly granted under it is of the same character as the reliefs which may be granted under the preceding clauses. The five specified clauses are not merely illustrative, but furnish an indication of the nature of the relief which may be granted in a suit under this section.(6) This clause must be read with what has preceded as referring to further relief to which the party may be entitled, which arises out of the existence of the trust in respect of which the suit has been brought.(7) On this ground it has been held that a suit which has been instituted simply and solely for the purpose of having a declaration that certain property is trust-property, and which was in no way a suit for the administration of the trust, or the removal of the trustees, or for any of the purposes referred to, was not within the section.(8) It may, however, be that in a suit for such purposes a declaration may be incidental and ancillary thereto.(9) Within the words

"further or other relief" is, it has been held, a decree for an account.(1) This is now expressly mentioned in clause (d). Before a scheme can be settled for the management of a temple and its funds, an account of the trust property must be taken. Until the trust funds are ascertained it is impossible to settle a scheme.(2) The Calcutta High Court has in one case held that a suit for the removal of a trustee, and for the recovery of trust-property from the hands of a third party to whom it has been improperly alienated by the trustee, falls within the section.(3) But this decision has been dissented from in the same Court,(4) in which it was held that persons claiming a title purely adverse to a trust are not proper parties to a suit for the execution of the trust. The Allahabad High Court has also held that the alienees are not proper parties, that a prayer for recovery of possession is not entertainable under this section, and that a suit for such purpose could be instituted only by the trustee.(5)

The High Courts at Calcutta,(6) Bombay,(7) and Allahabad (8) have held that in a suit under this section the Court may remove a trustee hostilely for breach of trust, and that the section applies both to contentious and non-contentious cases. Such relief was held to be involved in clause (b) of the former section, or to be included in "further or other relief." The Madras High Court, however, held, though at one time there was a difference of opinion on the point, that a suit to remove a trustee did not lie under this section.(9) A prayer for removal might, however, be inserted where the right of suit existed independently of, and the suit was not brought under, this section.(10) The amended section makes it now clear that it applies both to non-contentious and contentious suits, and clause (a) expressly mentions the removal of a trustee.

As clauses (b) and (c) allow of the appointment of new trustees and the vesting of the property in new trustees, it follows that the Court can take possession from the old trustee who has been removed and give it to the new trustee. Whether the Court can grant relief by taking possession of trust-property from the hands of a third party, to whom it has been improperly alienated,(1) has already been discussed. If there is a trustee and the suit is merely to recover property from strangers and not for the execution of the trust, it does not come within the section. If, again, there is a trustee, but the suit be for his removal, then, till he is removed, the trust-estate is vested in him, and he alone can sue strangers for possession. When the new trustee is appointed he can sue.(2) It has also been held that where there is a trustee, worshippers cannot sue strangers for possession,(3) though they are entitled, irrespective of this section or O. I. r. 8 to maintain an action against any person improperly interfering with their rights to worship.(4) If, however, a suit merely for possession as against strangers is not within the scope of the section, this question does not properly arise under it. It amounts simply to this, who has title under the ordinary law to sue for possession; and need not be further discussed. Within the terms "further relief" are the appointment of a receiver,(5) and the grant of an injunction, both forms of relief being of a merely ancillary character, and a decree for the cancellation of unauthorized leases (6) The Court, in sanctioning a scheme, may provide for the appointment of additional or new trustees, though such appointment may not be in conformity with the original constitution of the trust, or with the rules in force in respect to it, and a scheme framed is liable to variation for good cause shown.(7) Where a suit is maintainable under this section and the plaint seeks relief specified in that section, sect. 42 of the Specific Relief Act does not apply.(8)

"A suit."—The procedure under Romilly's Act (52 Geo. III. c. 101) was by petition and summary order, whereas a regular suit is prescribed by this section.(9) There is, however, no ground for suggesting that a suit under this section has the character of a summary proceeding. It possesses all the characteristics of a suit under sect. 9 of the Code.(1) Where a suit which is not within the section is instituted in a District Court, it has been held that the Court should not dismiss the suit, but should deal with it under sect 57, clause (a) (now O. VII. r. 10), and return the plaint to be presented to the proper Court.(2) So, also, where a Subordinate Judge held that this section was a bar to the suit, no consent having been obtained, it was held that he should not have proceeded to dispose of the case, but should have returned the plaint to be presented to the Court having jurisdiction to try the suit.(3)

"Any other Court."—With reference to the words "any other Court empowered on that behalf," it has been held that the notification empowering the Court should not be directed to a particular judge and should not purport to deal with a particular litigation which on the date of the notification was pending before another Court.(4)

Execution.—So far as a decree under this section orders particular acts to be performed by the defendants in the management of the trust, it may be enforced by their imprisonment or by the attachment of their property, or both.(5) And in order to obtain the removal of trustees who have infringed the scheme, the latter may be amended so as to include a provision for removal, and it is not necessary to file a separate suit.(6) In the under-mentioned case (7) application was refused, as the requirements of sects. 235 (j) and 260 of the former Code had been ignored. Where an order was held not to invest a suit with a representative character, a person not on the record and not a member of the community of the plaintiffs, but claiming certain rights under the decree, was held to have no right to apply to compel the observance of the scheme directed by the decree.(8) The directions in a scheme framed may be enforced in execution on application by persons interested.(9)

Settling a scheme.—Settling a scheme under this section is largely a matter of discretion, and the scheme will not be interfered with in appeal unless the discretion has been improperly exercised or the Court has failed to give due consideration to matters which it was bound to consider.(10)

PART VI.

SUPPLEMENTAL PROCEEDINGS.

94. In order to prevent the ends of justice from being defeated the Court may, if it is so prescribed,—

Supplemental proceedings.

(a) issue a warrant to arrest the defendant and bring him before the Court to show cause why he should not give security for his appearance, and if he fails to comply with any order for security commit him to the civil prison;

(b) direct the defendant to furnish security to produce any property belonging to him and to place the same at the disposal of the Court or order the attachment of any property;

(c) grant a temporary injunction and in case of disobedience commit the person guilty thereof to the civil prison and order that his property be attached and sold;

(e) make such other interlocutory orders as may appear to the Court to be just and convenient.

Supplemental proceedings.—This section is new. It is intended to generally define the powers of the Court in this respect, specific provision being made either by present or future rules. In this connection may be noted in the first paragraph "if it is so prescribed" in contrast with the phrase "in the manner prescribed," which occurs in other sections, e.g., sect. 90, ante. As regards security [clauses (a) and (b)], the former Code dealt with security for costs. This section deals also with security for personal appearance and production of property. As regards clauses (c), (d), (e), see O. XXXIX. rr. 1–5, O. XL., and O. XXXIX. rr. 6–10 respectively, and notes thereto.

Compensation for obtaining arrest, attachment or injunction on insufficient grounds.

95. (1) Where, in any suit in which an arrest or attachment has been effected or a temporary injunction granted under the last preceding section,—

(a) it appears to the Court that such arrest, attachment or injunction was applied for on insufficient grounds, or

(b) the suit of the plaintiff fails and it appears to the Court that there was no reasonable or probable ground for instituting the same, the defendant may apply to the Court, and the Court may, upon such application, award against the plaintiff by its order such amount, not exceeding one thousand rupees, as it deems a reasonable compensation to the defendant for the expense or injury caused to him:

Provided that a Court shall not award, under this section, an amount exceeding the limits of its pecuniary jurisdiction.

(2) An order determining any such application shall bar any suit for compensation in respect of such arrest, attachment or injunction.

Compensation.—This section amalgamates sects. 491 and 497 of the last Code. Prior to this enactment in the Code, a suit for damages would have lain for the wrongful suing out of mesne process. And such a suit will lie now. But it must be shown that there was malice and want of reasonable and probable cause.(1) In the case of an application under this section it must be shown that the arrest or attachment was applied for on insufficient grounds,(2) or, if the suit fails, that there was no probable ground for instituting it. Compensation may be awarded for excessive attachment, notwithstanding that the plaintiff may be successful.(3) A defendant, however, is not bound to apply for redress under this section, and by omitting to do so, or by applying and failing to obtain an award, he does not lose his right to bring a regular suit; (1) though if he applies for compensation, any award which may be passed will bar a suit.(2) Compensation can only be granted by the Court which disposes of the suit,(3) and on the recorded application of the defendant, and not of its own motion.(4) A Provincial Small Cause Court has jurisdiction to award damages under this section to a defendant whose property has been attached on insufficient grounds.(5) If a defendant is arrested, he may apply under this section although he has not been summoned.(6) In a summary suit, if a defendant has been arrested before judgment and claims compensation for such arrest under this section, he is entitled on that ground to apply for leave to defend the suit, and, if a primâ facie case is made out, leave to defend should be given. Under the Code, a cross-claim made by a defendant against a plaintiff cannot, in ordinary cases, be set up as a defence, except when it arises out of the very transaction sued upon and is in the nature of a set-off, but the special cross-claim provided for by this section, viz. a claim for compensation for arrest on insufficient grounds, may under that section be taken into account in any suit, and the amount awarded as compensation be awarded in the decree, and thus pro tanto be a defence to the plaintiff's claim in the suit.(7)

It was held that there was no appeal from an order awarding compensation under this section.(8) But see now sect. 104, clause (f). Under sect. 491 of the last Code, the Court has to award "in its decree." Now the section runs "in its order." The order may, however, under sect. 36, be executed as if it were a decree. As regards the amendment in clause 2, see the next paragraph.

Compensation.—The corresponding section of the Code of 1859 concluded with the words "an award of compensation under this section shall bar," etc.; therefore an unsuccessful application by a defendant did not debar him from instituting a suit.(9) And the same must have been held under the last Code, as it could not be said that where there has been a denial of compensation there has been an "award." It, however, an application had been made and granted, then a separate suit for compensation was barred. The present words "order determining," etc., are ambiguous, as by themselves they may refer either to the grant or refusal of an application. A person is not bound to apply under this section. There may be cases where the maximum amount of Rs. 1000 is an insufficient compensation. Persons may sue who do not wish to take advantage of the remedy given by this section.(1) The provisions of this section show that where a claim is dismissed an injunction cannot subsist pending an appeal, or until the period for lodging an appeal has elapsed; for if such were the case the Court would not have had authority given it to grant compensation.(2)

APPEALS FROM ORIGINAL DECREES.

Appeals from original decrees.

body of this Code or by any other law for the time being in force, an appeal shall lie from every decree passed by any Court exercising original jurisdiction to the Court authorized to hear appeals from the decisions of such Court.

(3) No appeal shall lie from a decree passed by the Court with the consent of parties.

Appeal.—An appeal is a stage in and part of the proceedings in a suit.(1) There must be a suit, for if there is none there can be no decree, and therefore no appeal.(2) It is the removal of a cause from an inferior to a superior Court for the purpose of testing the soundness of the decision of the former Court,(3) and the lodging of an appeal is thus equivalent to an allegation that the decree is wrong and that the reasons which led to it are as stated in the judgment insufficient.(4) It is a hearing before another tribunal, being in this distinguished from a review, which is the reconsideration of the same subject by the same Judge.(5) The function of an Appellate Court is to determine what decree the Court below ought to have made. It may affirm, reverse, or vary the decree under appeal.(6) The rule upon which the Privy Council has universally acted is to affirm the judgment, unless their Lordships see that the judgment is clearly wrong.(1) It is a rule of practice that a Court of Appeal should not upset the judgment of the first Court on a question of fact, depending on the appreciation of evidence, unless the former Court is quite confident that the judgment is wrong. But, after all, it is a rule of practice, meant for the guidance of Appellate Courts having jurisdiction to deal with questions of fact, and they are the sole judges of the question whether a judgment appealed against on facts is wrong.(2) An Appellate Court, in regular appeal, is bound to take notice of a positive invalidity of a document created by a Statute, even though no objection may have been raised to its admission in the Court below. The Appellate Court is thus bound in regular appeal to entertain an objection that a document is invalid for want of registration, even though no objection may have been raised to its admissibility in the Court below. "The bulwark against fraud," says West, J., "intended to be constituted by registration is of great public importance. We think we could not, consistently with the law, allow it (the unregistered document) to count as a part of the materials on which we have to dispose of this case, supposing that the registration was, indeed, indispensable to its validity." (3) An appellant will not be allowed to raise in the Court of Appeal a point which he did not raise in the Court below, even though there is some evidence in support of it, if the nature of that evidence is such that, by any possibility, the respondent might have been able to rebut, if that point had been raised originally.(4) If a party desires or intends to make misconduct of a Judge a ground of appeal to the High Court, he ought always to draw the Judge's attention to that matter either by presenting a petition or otherwise, so that a proper record may be at once made of the facts which he desires to establish in appeal.(5) A pending appeal, without annulling the judgment appealed against, leaves it subsisting as a valid adjudication governing the rights of the parties, but the further litigation and all matters connected therewith are transferred to and placed under the control of the Appellate Court. During the pendency of an appeal, the power of the inferior Court in any way to deal with the litigation is completely in abeyance, except to carry out the decree which, of course, it is the duty of the Court to do, as the Code in terms provides that the execution of the decree is not stayed by the mere fact that an appeal has been preferred against it.(6) It is not only competent to a Court of Appeal, but it may be its duty under certain circumstances to take notice of events which have happened since the order challenged in appeal was made. The Court has inherent power to recall an order improperly or fraudulently obtained. Where wrong has been done by order of Court, which has been set aside on appeal, the Court executing the decree without express authority is competent to put the parties in the position which they occupied before that order.(1) A decree of the Appellate Court merely affirming the decree of the first Court does not give the decree-holder fresh time for performing a condition imposed by the original decree.(2) It has been held that the effect of a party preferring an appeal was to re-open the decree so as to render it competent to the parties to agree that the case should be remanded for the trial of fresh issues even on points not raised in the ground of appeal.(3)

B. C.); (1) Madras Rent Recovery Act; (2) and with regard to an appeal from an order refusing to amend clerical error in form of probate,(3) see cases cited. See Registration Act, sects. 72, 76. The objection that "no appeal lies" is usually taken as a preliminary objection by the pleader for the respondent. But the Court will none the less consider it on learning from the appellant what the facts are.(4)

"An appeal shall lie." A right of appeal is not a natural and inherent right attaching to litigation. It can only be given by Statute.(5) A party can only appeal when so allowed by Statute: and it is only the Court to which jurisdiction is given to entertain an appeal in a particular matter which can determine it.(6) And where there is inherent incompetency in a Court, it has been held that objection can be taken at any time, and that consent cannot confer jurisdiction.(7) though as regards objections taken in appeal to want of jurisdiction of Courts of first instance, see now the provisions of sect. 21, ante.

The section does not confer a right of appeal from all adjudications which are decrees within the meaning of sect. 2, but in those cases only where the right is not taken away by the Code or any other law.(8) In order to sustain an appeal it must be shown (a) that the party has the right to appeal, and (b) that the Court to which he desires to prefer the appeal has the right to entertain it. A distinction must be drawn between provisions which confer rights on parties and those which confer jurisdiction on Courts. This section does not deal with the jurisdiction of Courts, but with the rights of appeal given to parties.(9)

47, ante. In the first part of the section the word "decrees" and in the con cluding portion of the first paragraph the word "decision" is used. But this difference of language does not involve any distinction. The appeal must be strictly from the decree, that is, the appellant must object to the decree before he can be allowed to enter upon his detailed objections to the judgment.(1) The object of an appeal is to correct the decree. An appeal lies from the decree, not from the judgment. There is, therefore, no appeal to a party in whose favour a decree is passed simply because there may be some expressions in the judgment which led to the decree which may be considered prejudicial.(2) An appeal will not lie from separate determinations of isolated issues of law or fact before taking evidence on the remaining issues.(3) If findings have been recorded upon some issues against a party and he desires to have formal effect given to them by the decree so as to allow of his filing objections thereto or of appealing therefrom, he must take steps to have the decree properly brought into conformity with the judgment, so that there may be matter on the face of it to show that something has been decided against him. In other words, he must obtain insertion in the decree itself (which alone contains the final determination of the cause and not the judgment) of such portions of the Court's findings as he considers himself injuriously affected by, so as to place himself in the position which the statute recognizes as giving him a right to impeach the decree. If he fails to follow this course, the decree, though in general terms, will stand good, as finally deciding the issues raised by the pleadings upon which the ultimate determination of the cause and the decree itself actually rested. More than these the decree cannot cover, and the findings in a judgment upon matters which subsequently turn out to be immaterial to the grounds upon which a suit is finally disposed of as to the plaintiff's right to any portion of the relief sought by him as declared by the decree, amount to no more than obiter dicta, and do not constitute a final decision.(4) When more questions than one arise in a suit, according to the circumstances of the case depending upon the nature of the questions and of the decision arrived at, it may be either necessary to decide them all, or sufficient to decide only some of them, for the disposal of the suit. In cases of the second class, the Court may either decide only the questions that are found necessary to decide, or it may decide all the questions raised. In the latter class of cases, again, the Court may either embody the result of its decision upon every question in the decree in the form of a declaration or otherwise, or it may not do so. Cases of this last-mentioned description, again, sub-divide into two classes, in one of which the decree is supported by the decision upon each of the questions determined, and in the other it is in spite of the decision upon some of those questions, as, for instance, where a suit fails upon the question of limitation, but the question of title is found for the plaintiff.(1) The mere fact that a Court has gone on to determine a question which it could not determine so as to bind the parties does not give a right of appeal against a decision on such a question.(2)

The former section allowed an appeal from any part of the decree which may also be of a provisional or preliminary character, such as a decree in a partnership or partition suit.(3) Though an appeal was allowed against a portion of a decision, yet there should, it was held, be a decision relating to the disposal of the entire suit.(4) The words "or from any part" have been now omitted.

"Courts authorized to hear appeals."—See the various Civil Courts Acts, and in Act XII. of 1887, sects. 20, 21; sect. 55, Indian Divorce Act (IV. of 1869).(5) As to Admiralty jurisdiction, see note.(6)

The subject-matter of an appeal should be valued (7) for the purpose of jurisdiction, according to the law in force at the date of the appeal and not of the suit which led to it.(8) Where a plaintiff definitely fixes a certain sum as the amount of his claim, this must be considered as the value of the original suit and the appeal will lie accordingly; but where he fixes a certain sum as the amount of his claim only approximately or tentatively, and prays that the amount of his claim may be ascertained in the course of the suit, then the amount found by the Court to be due to him must be regarded as the value of the original suit for the purpose of determining the forum of appeal.(9)

Ex-parte* decree (clause 2).—The clause allowing appeals from ex-parte decrees was added by sect. 45, Act VII. of 1888, previous to which Act it was doubted whether an appeal was given in such cases.(10)

1888. But such a remedy can be efficacious only in those cases, and their number must be small, in which the ex parte decree is either wrong in law on the face of the proceeding or is based upon evidence so weak that even though unrebutted it is insufficient to sustain the decree. In the great majority of cases in which a defendant having a good defence has had an ex parte decree passed against him, the disadvantage he labours under is that he has not been able to substantiate his defence by evidence before the Court. Upon the record, as it stands, the ex parte decree may be unassailable, but if the defendant has an opportunity (which he was prevented from having owing to some sufficient cause) of placing on the record evidence which he could have adduced to substantiate his defence, no such decree should have been passed. The remedy in such a case cannot be by way of appeal, which must ordinarily proceed upon the record as it stands. The proper remedy must be the one provided by sect. 108 of the Code." In Sadhu Krishna Ayyar v. Kuppan,(1) however, Sir Arnold White, C.J., said that these observations were merely obiter, and he added " they seem to me to involve the reading into the Code of a great deal which the Legislature might have said but did not say. I think it must be taken that the Legislature by accident or design has given a right of appeal apart from the merits, against an order on the ground that the defendant was not in default in failing to appear and against an ex parte decree, also apart from the merits upon the same grounds. There is a power to remand a case when the Appellate Court reverses an order refusing to set aside an ex parte decree, and it seems to me anomalous to hold that there is no such power when the Appellate Court allows an appeal against a decree upon the ground that there ought not to have been an ex parte decree against the defendant." (2) In this case it was held by the Full Bench that when a suit is decided ex parte an Appellate Court, to which the appeal from the decree is preferred under sect. 540 of the former Code, had jurisdiction to reverse the decree of the lower Court on the ground that such Court was wrong in proceeding to decide the suit ex parte and remand the suit for re-hearing.(3)

Appeal as to costs.—See notes to sect. 35, which deals with the general power to award costs.

Consent decree (clause 3).—No appeal lies from such a decree. A consent decree cannot be set aside by appeal or by motion.(4) For setting aside such a decree there are two available modes of procedure : (a) by a suit ; (b) by an application for a review of the judgment sought to be set aside. But the more proper mode is by an application for review.(5) under the general law, he may forego them and debar himself, or be estopped from asserting them. If, therefore, an appellant agrees not to appeal, he cannot do so.(1) A party, it has been held, may also otherwise be barred from appealing. Thus, where a decree was obtained against A and others, and A not appealing, the decree was set aside and the case remanded on the appeal of the co-defendants but re-affirmed by the first Court, it was held that A could not appeal from the last decree.(2) In the under-mentioned case,(3) however, a suit having been decided by the first Court after an intervenor had been made a party, it was remanded for trial on the appeal of the intervenor whose name was ordered to be expunged from the record. The suit was decided again in favour of the plaintiff, but the decision was reversed on appeal. It was held that the fact of the defendant having in the first instance allowed the intervenor alone to appeal, did not debar him, after the case was reopened by remand, from appealing in his own person.

Chapter XLI. of the last Code treated of appeals from original decrees, and Chapter XLII. in the same Code of appeals from appellate decrees. It is provided that an appeal shall be from such decrees generally. It is not expressly said by whom an appeal may be preferred, but it may reasonably be assumed that any party to the suit in which a decree is passed may, if dissatisfied with it, appeal from it. O. XLI. r. 33 refers to the judgment in appeal from original decrees, and enacts that it may be for confirming, varying, or reversing the decree against which the appeal is made, and applies under sect. 108 to judgments in appeal from appellate decrees. Hence, also, it is inferrible that the parties who are allowed to appeal are those who desire that a decree should be varied or reversed.(4)

But a pro forma defendant against whom no judgment has been given has no right to appeal, even if another party has been found to be the owner of the land, inasmuch as such finding carries with it no legal consequence as against him.(5) So in the under-mentioned case (6) it was held that the tenant had no reason to object to a decree, which was altogether in his favour, and it was not competent to him to present an appeal from the finding on an issue. Even in the case of findings inserted in the decree itself it is not necessary to appeal

if the findings be on issues which are not necessary for the decision of the suit in which they are raised.(1)

Assuming there is otherwise no bar, the question as to who may appeal is determinable by the common-sense consideration that there can be no appeal when there is nothing to appeal about. A person, therefore, who is no party (2) to the suit in which a decision is given can, as the decree does not affect him, have no ground to appeal therefrom. The person appealing must also have been a party when the decree was passed. Thus a person was once made a party to a suit, but the decree was set aside, the suit as against him dismissed, and the case remanded for trial. From this last decision he appealed, but the Court ordered the appeal to be struck off as made by a person no longer a party to the suit.(3) A party, however, to the suit when the decree is passed, or when they have been brought on the record, his representative (4) or assignee (5), may appeal regarding their own rights invaded by the decree.(6)

Ordinarily only the party against whom a decree is passed, that is the person ordinarily injuriously affected by the decree, can appeal. For the same reason a person against whom a suit has been dismissed usually cannot appeal against the decree, as he is not affected otherwise than beneficially by it. But in some cases a suit may be dismissed as against a defendant and yet the latter may have a right of appeal. It is not because a suit is formally dismissed that no appeal lies, but because such dismissal is ordinarily not merely no grievance but an actual benefit to the defendant. There is nothing to complain of. If, however, a party is aggrieved (7) by a decree then, notwithstanding that the suit is dismissed against him, he may appeal.

The general question whether successful defendants in a suit can appeal from the decree in their favour has been raised in several cases, though under different circumstances. In the first of the last-mentioned cases, which was one in which the defendants had no contention inter se, but on the contrary a common interest against the plaintiff who was the respondent in the appeal, it was held that as the appellants had no ground of complaint, and as the appeal was against a decree wholly in their own favour, the legal meaning of which was that the plaintiff's suit altogether failed, there was no appeal.(1) In the under-mentioned case (2) the plaintiff's suit had been dismissed. The defendant appellants did not desire that the decree dismissing the suit should be varied or reversed. The attempted appeal, which was disallowed, was by one defendant against another, the matter in issue being the authenticity and validity of a deed of conditional sale purporting to have been executed by one defendant as vendor in favour of the other as vendee. So again a party cannot appeal to protect a possession which he has disclaimed to hold except on behalf of another party whom he is not authorized to represent and who has not appealed.(3) In such case he is not interested either on his or on such other party's behalf.(4) Inasmuch as an appeal lies from the decree and not from the judgment; (5) therefore a party cannot appeal from a decree which is altogether in his favour simply because there may be findings or expressions in the judgment which may be prejudicial to him.(6) In a suit for rent in which the only real issue was whether one X. was or was not liable for rent, and in which Y. the alleged purchaser of the tenure was held to have been wrongly made a party on the application of the tenant, it was held that Y. had no right to appeal against a decree given against X. praying for a declaration of her (Y.'s) liability for rent as purchaser from the tenant.(7) On the other hand, an appeal has been held to lie by defendants against whom specifically no decree was made, but whose defence to the suit was necessarily disposed of by the decree.(1) In order to see what the decree really means, the Court may look not only into the judgment but into the pleadings. If the decree, although apparently, and so far as it goes, favourable to the defendants, is yet imperfect and not self-explanatory, and when read by the light of the record really unfavourable and may prove injurious to them, then the defendants, being aggrieved by it and having every interest to appeal, may do so.(2) In short, any person who being party to proceedings is injuriously affected by a decree passed therein is entitled to appeal.(3) And if this be shown, it is immaterial that the suit may have been dismissed as against him.

Ordinarily a case is decided upon issues between the plaintiffs on the one side and the defendants on the other. Thus a defendant, whether interested or pro forma only, cannot appeal against a co-defendant (4) unless the Court has dealt with the case at the hearing as raising not only a question between the plaintiff and defendants but also as between the defendants, in which case one of the defendants can appeal against the decree as between himself and the other defendant.(5) When the decree of the Lower Court proceeds on a ground common to all defendants the Appellate Court may, on appeal by one of the defendants against the whole decree, reverse the decree in so far as it affects the other defendants though they have not joined in the appeal.(6)

Preliminary decrees.—A decree according to the definition in sect. 2 may be either preliminary or final. And an appeal lies against a preliminary decree. It was, however, a matter of debate under the former Code whether in an appeal against the final decree, it was open to the appellant to question the correctness of the preliminary decree when no appeal had been preferred against it within the time allowed.(1) The Legislature has now determined the question in the negative by this section. The object of this section is to prevent preliminary questions being raised in the form of an appeal after the case has been decided on its merits.(2) But an aggrieved party can only appeal if a decree is extant in a formal shape.(3) Although there may be a preliminary finding, yet unless a formal decree is drawn up, there is no possibility of the appeal here contemplated.(4) There is no provision enabling an Appellate Court to dismiss an appeal against a preliminary decree on the ground that a final decree has been passed while that appeal was pending.(5).

Where in a suit for accounts the first Court recorded findings on preliminary issues and ordered accounts to be taken on their basis, but drew up no preliminary decree, and a Commissioner took the accounts, and on his report the suit was dismissed; it was held that under this section plaintiff was not barred from appealing and now objecting to the preliminary findings; it was held also that no party or pleader is bound to move the Court to draw a decree, and omission to do so cannot affect the right of appeal.(6).

opinion on a point of law, they may state the point of law upon which they differ, and the appeal shall then be heard upon that point only by one or more of the other Judges, and such point shall be decided according to the opinion of the majority (if any) of the Judges who have heard the appeal, including those who first heard it.

Procedure on difference of opinion.—The result of this provision is as follows :—Where the Judges differ, but not on any question of law, there can be no reference and the decree is affirmed.(1) But there is an appeal under the Letters Patent (vide post). If the difference is on a point of law, then the Judges may or may not (2) refer the point of law. In the case of reference the judgment on the point referred is according to the majority of the Judges who first heard the appeal and the third Judge ; and in the second case (that is, where there is no reference under this section) there is an appeal under the Letters Patent. The effect of this section is to supersede the provision in the Letters Patent that in the case of disagreement the judgment of the senior Judge shall prevail,(3) a provision which is still in force as regards Letters Patent appeals,(4) but it does not take away the right of appeal. Therefore when the judgment of a Lower Court has been confirmed under this section by reason of one of the Judges of the Appellate Court agreeing upon the facts with the Court below, an appeal will lie against such judgment under the Letters Patent, notwithstanding the terms of this section.(5) When the Judges of a Division Bench have concurred in a final decree, the fact that they differed on one point is no ground for an appeal under the Letters Patent.(6) It was also held that where the Judge to whom an appeal was referred, concurred with one of the differing Judges as to the decree to be passed, but did not agree with him as to the reasons therefor, there was no further appeal to the High Court under clause (15) of the Letters Patent.(7) See now as to amendment next paragraph but one. Sect. 647 of the Code of 1877 was held to extend sect. 575 of that Code (which on the face

"Of the majority."—The word "majority" obviously refers to appeals heard by more than two Judges,(2) and further the section does not say that any one or all of the differing Judges should be members of the Court when the appeal is decided. The decision has to be according to the opinions of the majority of all the Judges who have heard the appeal, including those who first heard it, that is, the opinions of the two differing Judges recorded when they agreed to refer have to be taken into account in determining the majority.(3)

"They may state the point of law."—Under the last Code the words were "the appeal may be referred." The wording of the proviso has been altered; it now deals only with the decision on the point of law referred.(4) It was held that the law did not require the Judges to announce the agreement to refer in open Court. As soon as the Judges agreed to refer and informed the Chief Justice, the order of reference took effect though it might be drawn up afterwards.(5) It was held that where a Bench of two Judges hearing an appeal differed in opinion but delivered judgment of the Court without any reservation, they were not competent to refer the appeal.(6)

"Shall then be heard."—It was held under the last Code (in accordance with the practice of the Calcutta and Bombay High Courts) that the third Judge to whom reference was made could sit and hear the appeal alone.(7) This is so now, the section stating that the appeal may be heard by one or more of the Judges. It was held under the last Code that when there was a reference under sect. 575 the whole appeal was open for argument and not only the point of law on which the Judges had differed in opinion.(8) This, however, is not so now, the section expressly stating that the appeal shall be heard upon the point of law referred only.

Cure of technicality.—This section contains one of the most salutary rules of law which the Code provides. Its obvious aim is to prevent technicalities from overcoming the ends of justice and from operating as means of circuity of litigation which the old method of English Common Law Courts so much encouraged.(1) The principle which it enacts has also been recognized in other statutes, such as the Evidence Act,(2) Stamp Act,(3) and Valuation Act.(4) The section excepts two cases, viz., want of jurisdiction (5) of the Court to try the case and the affectation of the merits by irregularities committed in the exercise of an existent jurisdiction. The result is that in any other case than these, errors and irregularities form no ground for appeal, and an appeal alleging such error and irregularity only will be dismissed. The entertaining of a matter which lies out of the jurisdiction is quite a different thing from proceeding in a faulty or improper way in a matter which lies wholly within it.(6) An objection to jurisdiction, the validity of which is patent on the face of the proceedings, can be taken at any stage,(7) the section being unavailable to cure the defect, and the merits in all cases must be looked to.

Whether an error or irregularity does in any particular case affect the jurisdiction must be determined with reference to the facts of that particular case. The following decisions are only referred to as illustrations of the application of the general principle which the section embodies.

The section now expressly deals with the question of misjoinder, as to which there has been previously a diversity of judicial opinion ; (2) the Courts being thus given a larger discretion in dealing with irregularities in proceedings. And the word misjoinder in this section includes non-joinder.(3) This section regulates the procedure of the Appellate Court, and is therefore applicable to all appeals heard after this Act came into force, even though instituted before that date.(4) It has been held that where a lower Appellate Court refuses to refer the matter in dispute to the arbitrator named in the application, the High Court can set aside that order and the defect will not be cured by this section.(5)

"Save where otherwise expressly provided."—The right of appeal is a substantive right of a very valuable nature, and the presumption is against the taking away of a substantive right of such a nature by mere implication, and where the Legislature wants to take it away it will do so expressly. The introduction of the word "expressly" gives effect to this view.(1) Cf. sect. 19 (3) and sect. 26 (3) Succession Certificate Act (2) (VII. of 1889); sect. 109 A. Cl. Calcutta High Court.(1) A special appeal on the grounds given in sect. 100 lies to the High Court from the decision of the Civil Judge at Vinchur.(2) When the lower Appellate Court passes separate decrees in appeals relating to the same matter between the same parties, against the same person, separate second appeals must be filed, though the decision in one second appeal will govern the rest.(3)

Scope of second appeal.—The grounds upon which a second appeal lies and the cases in which it is open to the High Court to interfere with the judgment of the lower Appellate Court, are those set out in sect. 100; and sect. 101 expressly enacts that no second appeal shall lie except on the grounds mentioned in the former section. The Privy Council have, in more than one case, pointed out the necessity of adhering strictly to the provisions of those sections.(4) And no Court in India or elsewhere has power to add to or enlarge those grounds.(5) No second appeal lies against a finding of fact. If the High Court goes through a case as a regular appeal it exceeds the statutory limits of its jurisdiction. It has no power to entertain a case except as an appeal from an appellate decree on the grounds stated in sect. 100, which deprives them of the right to review findings of fact unless these are vitiated with one or other of the errors or defects stated in this section.(6) The limitation to the power of Courts in a second appeal ought to be attended to and strictly followed, and the appellant ought not to be allowed to question the finding of the first Appellate Court upon a matter of fact.(7) It cannot detract from the weight of concurrent findings of fact, that different Courts, in arriving at the same result upon the same evidence, have not been influenced by precisely the same considerations. A difference of opinion to that extent is only calculated to suggest that the evidence, whatever view be taken of it, must necessarily lead to one and the same inference.(8) The consent of parties will not give the High Court a jurisdiction which it does not otherwise possess; (9) so the High Court, even with the consent of the parties, cannot pronounce a decree on the facts in a special appeal.(10) On second appeal the High Court have no power to deal with the sufficiency of evidence, they have only a right to entertain questions of law. Their duty being thus confined, it seems that when evidence has been wrongly admitted by the Court below the High Courts have, generally speaking, no right to decide whether the remaining evidence in the case other than that which has been improperly admitted is sufficient to warrant the finding of the Court below. This question of sufficiency of evidence cannot be decided without examining in detail that other evidence and determining, as a question of fact, whether it is sufficient of itself to warrant the lower Court's finding.(1)

In a special appeal, the general affirmation of a judgment below can only be on the points raised by the special appellant. By rejecting a special appeal, it does not follow that the High Court necessarily affirms all the other findings of fact or of law which the lower Appellate Court may incidentally come to.(2)

If the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court contain findings, which, though immaterial to the decision of the case and unnecessary for the Judge to decide, yet, as they form part of the judgment and decree, might give rise to the application of the doctrine of res judicata, the High Court, on second appeal, may order that such findings shall be expunged from the record.(3) There is no general rule that in every case when evidence is taken on a question of fact the parties are entitled to the decision of two Courts. Therefore when additional evidence is taken by the lower Appellate Court, the High Court cannot go into the facts as in the case of a first appeal.(4)

The Code provides for the manner in which the judgments of Courts are to be revised and corrected, and there is no other lawful mode by which decrees of Courts can be reviewed. Thus where a Court of Appeal directed a remand for a particular purpose, namely, to try the plea of payment, the Court of remand, it was held, should try that plea only and had no authority to try any other plea; if the Court proceeded to hear and determine the whole case over again, the decree passed by it should be revised except as to the plea referred to on remand.(5) A remand order conclusively determines the points of law involved in it, and these cannot be questioned on second appeal.(6) The High Court in special appeal may reverse the finding of the lower Appellate Court instead of remanding the case when it is found that the lower Appellate Court had not in any way disaffirmed the findings of the lower Court.(7) If the facts found by the lower Appellate Court are sufficient to enable the High Court to apply any principle of law to the appeal before them, then they may dispose of the case without any remand ; (1) but it was formerly held that if the lower Appellate Court omitted to record any finding upon a material part of the case, the second Appellate Court were not at liberty to draw any inference of fact from the evidence in the case, and should remand the case for retrial.(2) But see the new sect. 103, post.(3)

The above observations as to the limitation on the power to deal with facts must now be read subject to the new provisions contained in sect. 103, post.

In adjudicating on issues of fact the first process is to determine as to their existence or non-existence. In order to determine such an issue, inferences are necessarily drawn from other facts as to the existence or non-existence of facts in issue. Such inferences and the conclusions to which they lead are inferences and findings of fact.

An erroneous finding of fact is not an error or defect in procedure, though, as hereinafter pointed out, the Court may in adjudicating on facts vitiate its conclusions by errors of law and procedure. A simple finding of fact, however erroneous or unsatisfactory it may be, is not the subject of second appeal. There is no jurisdiction to entertain such an appeal on the ground of an erroneous finding of fact, however gross or inexcusable the error may seem to be. Where there is no error or defect in the procedure, the finding of the first Appellate Court upon a question of fact is final, if that Court had before it evidence proper for its consideration in support of the finding.(4)

There are, however, decisions which held that if the judgment is not based upon the whole evidence upon the records, and the Judge does not take into consideration all the facts and circumstances of the case, then, there is an error in procedure ; (5) as also where the Judge had erroneously assumed a fact to exist which does not exist—as where a Judge came to a conclusion on the assumption that a document had not been filed whereas it was on the record.(1) or believes there is no evidence of a fact when there is,(2) or proceeds upon a misconception of the facts proved; (3) or bases his judgment on evidence which is not on the record.(4)

The last four cases of misconception offer no difficulty. This cannot, however, be said as to the first case. There is no doubt as to the principle, that in judging on the facts the Court must consider all of them, otherwise there is not a proper procedure in investigation. The difficulty, however, is in establishing its violation by showing in any particular case that a fact has not been considered even where it may not have been expressly mentioned in the Judgment. If the fact was present to the Judge's mind, but he has either not given it weight, or the degree of weight which it is alleged he should have done, it is sometimes loosely said that the fact has not been considered. But this case is to be distinguished from those above mentioned, and is really tantamount to an appeal as to fact. The line distinguishing the two classes of cases is not infrequently a narrow one, and has perhaps in some cases been overpassed.

In, however, the actual determination of fact there may be error of law. The High Court may consider whether the procedure adopted by the lower Appellate Court in dealing with the facts is proper or not (5) Thus its conclusion may be come to in the absence of all evidence,(6) or be based on than that produced,(1) or misdirect itself as to the nature of proof required by law, as for instance in regard to the elements of a custom which has the force of law.(2) or misapprehend the real issue to be determined (3) and the legal position of the parties.(4)

Further, if it be assumed that no error of law has been committed in the mode of dealing with the facts, that is in determining their existence or non-existence; from the facts so found inferences may be drawn as to the existence of certain matters which are the subject of legal definition. In such a case there is a legal inference from the facts found. Though the finding of fact cannot be questioned, an appeal Court may accept the finding of fact and question the accuracy of the legal inferences therefrom, for this is a matter of law and not of fact. The soundness of conclusions involving matter of law may be questioned.(5) In such a case it is not any fact which is in question, but the soundness of the conclusions of law drawn from those facts. Thus upon the question whether there is a binding agreement a Court may find certain facts and go on to hold upon those facts that they constitute in law an acceptance of the agreement. The finding as to the facts which are the basis of the inference cannot be questioned though the inference, being a legal inference on the facts found, may be.(6) If the legal conclusion derived from the facts found is not consistent with settled principles of law, there is an error of law.(7) So acquiescence is not a question of fact but of legal inference from the facts found;(8) and so is estoppel;(9) and the question of the proper custody of documents,(10) though whether it is credible whether documents were in a particular custody or whether the facts rebut the presumption of authenticity are questions of fact.(11) Construction of a document involves both the meaning of the words and their legal effect, or the effect which is to be given to them. question of fact and the second of law.(1) Misconstruction of a document which is the foundation of a suit is ground for appeal.(2) The question whether possession is adverse or not is often one of simple fact, but it may also be a conclusion of law or a mixed question.(3)

So again on the question of good faith a finding that certain vendors intended by a transfer to defeat their creditors and that their transferee was aware of an impending execution against them are as findings of facts conclusive. But the conclusion drawn therefrom that the purchase was not in good faith is an inference of law which is capable of correction in appeal.(4) So though a Court of second appeal must accept the facts as found, the conclusion to be drawn whether, assuming such facts to be true, a sale did or did not bind persons is a matter with which it is free to deal.(5) A notice to quit must be reasonable, and this is a question of fact, but it is a question of law whether there is evidence on which the Court can properly arrive at the conclusion of fact.(6) So a conclusion from the fact of one person carrying on business and appearing to be the only partner that there could be no other partner was held erroneous as amounting to an assertion that in no case could there be a dormant partner.(7) Where an Appellate Court had found that a grant of pasture-land held under the special law relating to land tenure in Kumaun was inconsistent with the general wishes and well being of the village community, it was held that this was a finding of fact and not to be disturbed by second appeal.(8)

Lastly, the finding may not be conclusive because of the absence of reasons for it which are required to constitute a legal judgment.(9) But the Court has refused to interfere simply because the Judge did not remark upon every portion of the evidence that he excluded from his consideration,(1) as also where the judgment was sufficiently intelligible to enable the High Court to deal with the case.(2)

Where a Judge states as a fact that an admission was made before him by one of the parties to the suit, the High Court cannot in special appeal inquire whether the Judge was right or wrong in making that statement. If he is wrong, the aggrieved party's remedy is by a review of judgment in the Court below and not by special appeal to the High Court. If the Judge erred in supposing the alleged admission to have been made, the party's proper course is at once to bring the error to the notice of the Judge and to apply for a review of his judgment. If he does not do so, the High Court cannot, it was said, assist him in special appeal.(3) of notice to quit may be taken in second appeal.(1) There is no appeal upon the question of the credibility of witnesses when the lower Court's views are based upon inferences from the facts proved or appearing, whether the reasons given be right or wrong.(2) While the misconstruction of a document, the foundation of a suit, is a ground of appeal, there is none because some portion of the evidence may be in writing and the Judge makes a mistake as to the meaning of or effect to be given to it;(3) nor is there properly such a thing as the construction of a deposition of a witness. The word as so used means what the Court thinks is proved by it, and there is no appeal on this point.(4) A misreading or misconception of the evidence is no ground for interference in second appeal.(5) The bona fides of the parties is a question of fact.(6) A special appeal does not lie because some portion of the evidence may be in writing and the Judge makes a mistake as to the meaning of it. For instance, a writing supposed to contain an admission may be put in as part of the evidence, but a mistake in its meaning is not a misconstruction of a document upon which a special appeal will lie if it is connected with other evidence affecting its construction. The misconstruction of a document which is the foundation of a suit, and which is in the nature of a contract or a document of title is a ground of a second appeal.(7) But to discredit witnesses merely for general reasons not affecting the particular credit of any individual deponent is to commit an error of law which can be subject of a special appeal.(8) Thus where the evidence for the plaintiff was disbelieved because his witness was a relative of his, there was (it was held) an error of law based upon a total misconception of the position of the plaintiff's lessor and substantially affecting the decision of the case on the merits; (1) as also where a witness was disbelieved not for anything he said nor for anything deposed to in the evidence of the other witnesses, but simply because he was a patnari (2) or by caste a weaver,(3) or believed because he was a cultivator.(4)

Discretion when used by a Court must be judicial and not arbitrary, and where a lower Appellate Court has exercised its discretion in a sound and reasonable way, after a careful consideration of the facts, and not arbitrarily, the second Appellate Court has no power to interfere.(5) But the discretion of a Court is liable to review or appeal where it is not judicial but arbitrary and perverse, caused by caprice or prejudice, or where the discretion is exercised without any proper legal material to support it.(6) It has been held that there may be the exercise of so bad a discretion as to amount to an irregularity in law, and on this ground the High Court has looked into the grounds upon which the Lower Appellate Court has admitted an appeal after the lapse of the period allowed by the Limitation Act.(7) But probably the correct rule in such a case or its converse is that the High Court will not interfere if the discretion is judicially exercised, even though the course ultimately adopted be not that which the High Court itself would have taken.(8)

The following have been considered matters of discretion:—Refusal to summon plaintiff at instance of defendant; (9) passing further orders in regard to plaintiff who disregards Court's summons to attend; (10) refusal to add parties; (11) disallowing additional evidence; (12) or interest; (13) directing

When appeals in analogous cases are pending in a Superior Appellate Court, the Inferior Court of Appeal, if it decide the appeal without waiting for the decision of the Superior Appellate Court in the analogous cases, does not exercise a wise discretion.(8)

"Or to some usage."—Usage having the force of "law" means a local or family usage as distinguished from the general law.(9) A finding upon the evidence on a question of custom is one of fact.(10) The right of user is substantively a question of fact to be determined upon the evidence furnished by the litigants. If the Lower Appellate Court has not made any error of law in drawing an inference from the evidence produced to support such a right, then the High Court in second appeal will not interfere.(11) A local usage or custom being in its nature such as might necessarily affect not only parties to the particular litigation and their privies, but whole bodies of people, stands on a footing similar to a matter of law derived from other sources than usage. So, though this section disallows a second appeal with reference to findings of fact, yet, the existence or non-existence of a usage having the force of law is unaffected by such disallowance. Consequently it is the duty of the High Court, when it has to pronounce upon that question, to examine evidence bearing upon it, not only as to the sufficiency thereof to establish all the elements (antiquity, uniformity, etc.) required to constitute a valid usage having the force of law, but also the credibility of the evidence relied on and the weight due to it.(12) Whether or not a custom exists, is a question of fact. But if the Lower Appellate Court has acted upon illegal evidence or has come to a decision upon evidence as to the custom which is legally insufficient to establish a custom, the High Court can treat the question as one of law. Again, if it appeared that the Lower Appellate Court has clearly from its judgment disregarded legal evidence, the Court can interfere. But the High Court in second appeal is not bound to examine and consider the evidence in all cases when the existence or non-existence of an alleged custom is the sole question at issue.(1)

"Failed to determine some material issue."—As to failure to determine a material issue, see cases noted.(2) The Lower Appellate Court, if it does not accept, must displace the findings arrived at by the first Court.(3)

It is impossible to lay down any general rule as to when the Court should consider that the reasons for a particular finding by the Lower Appellate Court must be stated. There may be many cases in which the omission to state the reasons would render the judgment so unintelligible that the Court, in second appeal, could not pronounce any opinion upon whether it was right in law. In such a case a Court would no doubt require the reasons to be stated. But there may be cases in which the Court would not think it necessary to require them and the case will not be sent back. It is not the law that whenever the Judge of an Appellate Court thinks that one set of witnesses is trustworthy, he is bound to give his reasons for it.(4) Where the Lower Appellate Court fully adopts the reasoning and the conclusions of the first Court, it is not bound to set out the reasons for its decision with the same fulness as if it was deciding the case in the Court of first instance or as if it was reversing the judgment below. It may supply some additional reasons, but the insufficiency of these additional reasons, or the absence of any, would not justify a second appeal.(5) When a person has put forward his defence in a general way and allowed an issue to be framed upon it which has been found against him in the Lower Appellate Court, he will not be allowed to say, in special appeal, "here is a question of fact which the Courts below have not

"Error or defect in the procedure."—An error or defect in procedure may consist in the omission to settle issues; (2) improper remand; (3) dismissing a suit for false verification instead of disposing of it on the merits; (4) adjudicating in the absence of, and without notice to, the respondent; (5) allowing a review of judgment without inquiring into the existence of grounds upon which a review is permissible.(6) The amount of damage is a question of fact unless such amount be beyond legal limits if there be any.(7) A mistake of account is not an error of law or procedure.(8) though the principle on which it has been taken may be. The Court has interfered where a commission returned unexecuted was not sent a second time.(9) There is error where a Court which has ordered a local investigation proceeds to determine the case before its return.(10) Refusal to take or record evidence (11) is an error of procedure. So is the omission to state the real question to be determined and to examine evidence with reference to the right issues; (12) and to take notice of serious irregularities in the first Court and to render accurate its decree; (13) deciding a suit on a case not set up by the parties nor warranted by the evidence.(14) For other cases see notes to the section passim. It is not sufficient that there should be such error. It must have been substantial and such as may possibly have affected the decision on the merits (vide post).

"Upon the merits."—This is one of several provisions in which the Legislature has indicated its intention that substantial justice and not technicality is to be looked to. An error in procedure which does not affect the decision of the case on the merits will not confer a right of second appeal.(1) This is a matter which must be determined in each case according to its circumstances. In sect. 372 (Act VIII. of 1859) the word "possibly" did not occur. It ran as follows: "which may have produced error or defect," and the word "may" was construed not to imply "may by some possibility" but "may not improbably." It was for the High Court Judges to exercise their discretion in determining whether there was such a probability, whether there had been a fair and sufficient trial, and whether litigation had reached a stage at which it ought to cease or not. The word "possibly" was accordingly introduced,(2) which avoided any necessity for the consideration of the evidence.

Ex parte appellate decree.—A respondent in whose absence an appeal has been heard ex parte and against whom judgment has been given, may prefer a second appeal from the decree under this section, and his remedy is not limited to an application under O. XLI. r. 2 to the Court which passed the decree to rehear the appeal.(3) The objection that the first Court did not make sufficient inquiry before admitting an application for rehearing and setting aside a former ex parte decree in favour of the plaintiff and dismissing the plaintiff's suit should be taken in the lower Appellate Court, and if it is not taken there it can not be raised in second appeal, because it would not be doing justice to restore an ex parte decree which the lower Courts have, on a subsequent trial on the merits, found should not be renewed. If the objection was a substantial one it should have been raised before the lower Court at the proper time.(4) that it must coincide with that of the appeal before the Lower Appellate Court, as the latter should be limited to the case made in the Court of first instance. Throughout the litigation the same ground of attack and (save as mentioned) of defence should be put forward. A plaintiff appellant will not be allowed to present his case in an entirely new shape and raising fresh issues to fall back upon a new and different title or cause of action from that first asserted.(1)

A case is not to be decided in special appeal upon a question which was not raised or tried or considered by the lower Courts. Parties must not be allowed to come before the High Court in special appeal and raise a question or take an objection which, if raised or taken in the first Court or even in the Appellate Court, might have been met in those Courts by adopting a course which cannot be adopted when the case comes before the High Court in special appeal.(2) But where there was sufficient reason for the question not having been raised in the lower Courts the case may be remanded in second appeal with a view to have that question determined.(3) An appellant is not entitled to raise a question of fraud which was not alleged in the written statement and as to which no issue was raised in the original Court.(4) Where a specific title has been alleged but not proved and the plaintiff endeavours to succeed in the first Court or second Court of appeal upon a title by twelve years' adverse possession, he must be prepared to show that this other title by twelve years' adverse possession was raised in the Court of first instance with sufficient clearness to enable his adversary to understand that he claimed to succeed as well by twelve years' adverse possession as by the specific irrelevancy of evidence,(1) for an erroneous omission to object to the omission of irrelevant testimony does not make it available as a ground of judgment; an objection appearing on the face of a notice.(2)

An objection on the ground of misjoinder,(3) whether of parties or causes of action, must now under sect. 99 show that the merits have been affected.

But a mixed question of law and fact cannot be raised for the first time in second appeal. So an objection has been disallowed on a question of title; (4) as also that a suit was barred under sect. 244 of the last Code, the objection being one not of pure law but depending upon the facts (5) and as to the competence of an agent to sue.(6) And defendants will not be allowed to set up for the first time in second appeal a case which involves an inquiry into facts not ascertained in the Court below.(7) A question of jurisdiction, or indeed any other question which depends upon a question of fact which has not been determined by the lower Court or admitted by both parties, will not be allowed to be raised.(8) It has been recently held that the construction of a document is a question of law which Judges in second appeal are not precluded from considering by any finding of a lower Appellate Court based on such document.(9) should have been called and examined.(1) Parties who allow a suit to be conducted in the lower Courts as if a certain fact was admitted cannot afterwards in special appeal question it and recede from the tacit understanding.(2) And if any irregularity has been committed at the instance of an appellant or with his consent he has no just ground of complaint in appeal.(3)

The not taking or pressing an objection in the lower Court may not only satisfy the Court that the parties did not intend to take it as they knew there was nothing in it; (4) but may also act, where facts are involved, by way of estoppel. For had the objection been taken it might have been met. On the same principle an objection for the first time in appeal that the plaint did not ask for further relief has been disallowed, for if taken the plaint might have been amended and may be amended in appeal.(5) An objection will not be allowed which, if taken at the proper time, might have been removed.(6) On this principle, if secondary evidence is admitted without objection, the Court of Appeal will not entertain an objection that primary evidence should have been given.(7) In the case of alleged irregularity it is a safe maxim for a Court of Appeal to be governed by, that an objection, which, if taken, might have been cured, and which was not taken in the Court below, shall not be taken in the Court of Appeal.(8) An appellant will not be allowed to raise in the Court of Appeal a point which he did not raise in the Court below, even though there is some evidence in support of it, if the nature of that evidence is such that, by any possibility, the respondent might have been able to rebut it if the point had been raised originally.(9)

If an appellant in a second appeal was contented, and by his conduct he shows that he elects to take his chance of having the decree of the first Court confirmed on appeal on the evidence before the Court, he cannot be heard afterwards to complain in second appeal that there was a material irregularity in the conduct of the case, on the ground that all his evidence was not before the appeal Court which reversed the first decree. It is his business to have brought to the notice of the lower Appellate Court that all his witnesses were not examined before the first Court, and not having done so, he cannot in second appeal, take the objection in order to have the chance of a second trial.(10) Such objection, if not raised in the Court below, and if it appears that

If the suit is actually tried by a Small Cause Court, then no appeal is allowed. There are, however, many suits which would be triable by a Small Cause Court if one existed with local and pecuniary jurisdiction, but which are in fact tried as original suits by a District Munsif Court because there is no Small Cause Court competent to try them. In these suits a first appeal is allowed by the Code. But a second appeal is disallowed by this section as it is considered that such cases as come within it are not sufficiently important to be entitled to a second appeal.(1)

"No second appeal."—The section refers to second appeals, that is appeals from appellate decrees and not to appeals from orders,(2) and does not interfere with a right of appeal from order where elsewhere given. This section, which bars a second appeal in cases of the nature stated, applies equally to orders passed in execution as to the original decree itself.(3) For the purpose of determining whether a second appeal lies in execution in a suit of a Small Cause nature, the test is not the amount claimed in the execution proceedings, but the amount of the subject-matter of the suit.(4)

"Of the nature cognizable."—The nature of a suit must be ascertained by considering all the allegations in the plaint and the prayer. In determining whether or not a second appeal is barred, the Court ought to regard the suit not as it ought to have been framed but as it is in fact framed and brought, unless the plaintiff has, with the object of evading the jurisdiction of a Court of Small Causes and bringing the suit in the ordinary Courts, added a claim for a relief to which he knows he is not in law entitled.(5) The Court must look to the nature of the suit as brought by the plaintiff, and not to the nature of the defence, to determine whether or not the Court of Small Causes has jurisdiction. It is not in the power of a defendant to oust the Court of a jurisdiction that it otherwise has, by the mere raising of a plea of title. The bona fides of the plea can not affect the question, for such a plea, whether made bonâ fide or not, would have to be inquired into. Where such a plea is raised the Court of Small Causes has the power to inquire into it and determine it for the purpose of the suit which it has jurisdiction to try.(1) By merely asking, in the alternative, for an account of the profits, the plaintiff can not convert a suit cognizable by a Court of Small Causes into one of a different nature. Where a definite sum only is to be ascertained, viz. the amount of profits received by the defendant during the years in question, from which by a simple calculation what the plaintiff's share in those profits amounts to can be ascertained, there is no account within the meaning of Art. 31, sect. II. of the Small Cause Court Act to be taken and no second appeal lies.(2) Where all the relief which the plaintiff claimed in his plaint could be obtained in his suit without asking for a declaration, the addition of the prayer for a declaration was held not to prevent the suit being of the nature cognizable in Courts of Small Causes.(3) The value of the subject-matter of the suit must be determined by reference to the value put by the plaintiff upon it in the plaint, not only for fiscal purposes, but also for purposes of jurisdiction.(4) The terms of the section do not refer to the amount in dispute at the time the appeal is preferred, but to the amount or value of the subject-matter of the original suit.(5) The provisions of sect. 144 Bengal Tenancy Act do not over-ride the provisions of this section. The former section determines the venue, but it has no bearing upon the question of the nature of the suit.(6) Where a plaint is presented in a Court having both ordinary and Small Cause jurisdiction, the suit is still cognizable by a Small Cause Court.(7) Where it was urged that though actually a "Small Cause" the suit having been instituted and dealt with in the ordinary Court, that circumstance involved the consequence that a second appeal would lie, it was ruled that this was not so: that the nature of the cause was not variable in any way according to the Court in which it was brought, and that a Small Cause was such wherever instituted. The words "suit of the nature cognizable, etc.," are equally applicable whether the suit is brought in a Small Cause or any other Court.(8) When a Subordinate Judge invested with Small Cause Court Jurisdiction tries a Small Cause suit under his ordinary jurisdiction, the character of the suit is not altered by the mode in which the Subordinate Judge exercises his jurisdiction.(1) Moreover, a suit does not cease to be a suit cognizable by a Small Cause Court by reason of the defendant having by way of set off made a counter claim for Rs. 120, when the pecuniary limit of the jurisdiction of the Court invested with the jurisdiction of a Court of Small Causes was Rs. 50.(2) If a suit is cognizable by a Court of Small Causes, then, notwithstanding the fact that the plaint was returned by the Small Cause Court to be filed in the Civil Court, on the ground that the suit involved a question of title, this section applies if the value of the subject-matter of the suit is below Rs. 500. Sect. 23 of the Provincial Small Cause Court Act is only an enabling section, and enables the Court, at any stage of the proceedings, to return the plaint in order that it may be presented to any Court which could determine the title, but that section does not say that such suits shall not be cognizable by the Small Cause Court.(3) Even if such a suit is instituted in the ordinary Court the section will apply; because its applicability depends on the nature of the suit and not on the Court in which it is instituted, and it will apply even to a case in which the Court which entertained the suit had no jurisdiction to take cognizance of it.(4)

The words "of a nature cognizable" seem to have reference to the subject-matter of the suit as distinguished from the amount of the claim.(5) In determining whether a second appeal lies under this section, the nature of the suit as it was originally framed is to be considered, and not any form it may subsequently assume.(6)

Each case must be decided on its own facts with reference to the provisions of the Act applicable, but for the purposes of reference it may be stated that the following suits have been held to be cognizable: suit for money had and received to plaintiff's use; (7) suit by widow for personal property taken from her husband in his lifetime; (8) suit for recovery of certain books and money collected; (9) claim on bond specially registered; (10) claim for contribution in respect of debt created by virtue of the payment

Power of High Court to determine issues of fact.

Determination of question of fact.—This section is new. Notwithstanding the opinion to the contrary of Petheram, C.J.,(11) which the section in effect embodies, it has hitherto been the practice of the division Benches of the High Courts in second appeals not to determine in any case issues of fact. This practice, however, in many instances has led to unnecessary expense and delay. Some small question of fact may have been left undetermined, and though its solution may be obvious, the Court has deemed itself precluded from dealing with the matter and bound to order a remand. The present provision, which is entirely new, is therefore a very useful one. The power to determine fact is, however, a discretionary one which the Court will exercise according as it thinks proper.(12)

See now O. XLIII. r. 1 (a). Orders returning plaints for amendment have been omitted. Orders refusing amendment were not appealable, Sarsuti v. Kunj Behari, 5 A. 345 at p. 356 (1883) ; Watson and Co. v. Nidhoo Digwar, 10 W. R. 87 (1868). As to clause 18 of former section, see Mehdi would support a prima facie inference that the right of appeal from orders had been restricted. But this inference is dispelled on looking at s))). clause (h) [now (c)] which allows an appeal from any order made under Rules from which an appeal is expressly allowed by Rules. We have gone carefully into the question of the cases in which an appeal should be allowed from these orders and our conclusion is expressed in the Rules themselves." See O. XLII. r. 1.

As appeared from the wording of the first clause in the last Code an appeal was given only in respect of orders "under this Code." Thus it has been held that an order under sect. 5 of the Court Fees Act was not within this section ;(1) and that no appeal lay against an order directing a penalty to be enforced under the Stamp Act.(2) Chapter XLIII. of the last Code was not extended to suits and proceedings under the Agra Tenancy Act.(3)

It has been held that on an appeal from an order of an Appellate Court, the High Court was bound to accept as in a second appeal from a decree the findings of fact arrived at by the Lower Appellate Court.(4) The orders passed in appeal being final, no second appeal lies.(5) The right of appeal from interlocutory orders was held to cease with the disposal of the suit.(6)

It has been held that sub-section 1 (c) of this section does not confer an unrestricted right of appeal, for when an order has been made by which an award has been modified the validity of the whole award cannot be called in question in an appeal against that order.(7) And it has been pointed out that in cases under O. XXI. r. 89 (sect. 310A of last Code) only a first appeal is now permitted, for the order is made appealable under O. XLIII. r. 1, cl (j) and consequently a second appeal is barred under sub-section 2 of this section; but that an order under sect. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is not appealable under O. XLIII., and therefore this sub-section does not bar a second appeal from such an order.(1)

It has also been held that this section only relates to an appeal from an order which is not a decree, and that the exception in cl. (h) of sub-section 2 has been made because provision is made elsewhere for an appeal from an order of arrest or detention in execution of a decree, such an order being made under sect. 47 and being appealable under sect. 96.(2)

In a recent case it was held that appeals only lie from decrees under sect. 2 or orders under this section, and that an order extending time under sect. 148 comes under neither heading and is therefore not appealable.(3)

Whether section affects Letters Patent.—The Governor-General in Council may pass laws which shall have the effect of amending or altering the provisions of the Letters Patent.(4) The question in each case is, has this been done? This is a matter of construction of the Letters Patent and the particular section of the Code which is alleged to have modified them. By sect. 117 the provisions of the Code, except as otherwise specially provided, apply to the High Courts. In the first place as regards appeals under the Letters Patent the order appealed against must be a "judgment," that is an order deciding finally any question at issue in the case or the rights of any of the parties to the suit. If it is not a "judgment" it is not appealable.(5) Nextly, assuming that it is a judgment, it may be in respect of a matter not dealt with by the Code. So an order for attachment for contempt is not an order in exercise of civil jurisdiction, and therefore, does not come within sect. 591 (now 105) of the Code.(6) If, however, an order is passed in civil jurisdiction which is a "judgment" under the Letters Patent, the question then arises as to how far, if at all, the Letters Patent are controlled by the Code. As regards this Chapter in the last Code the earlier decisions of the Madras High Court and the decisions of the Allahabad High Court held that sect. 588 of that Code, which this section replaces, modified the Letters Patent, and that the right of appeal given by them was subject to the limitations on appeal prescribed by the Code.(7) It was, however, subsequently held and probably now is, so far as the Calcutta and Madras High Courts are concerned, that the interpretation to be placed on the decision of the Privy Council (1) is that this section does not touch the right of appeal given by the Letters Patent.(2) These decisions consider that of the Privy Council to be of general application, and proceed upon the construction that the scheme of the Code as to appeals is that they lie from one Court to another, and that therefore this section has no application to a case where the appeal is from one Judge of a Court to the Full Court.(3) As regards other sections it has been held that sect. 597 (now 111) of the Code modifies sect. 39 of the Letters Patent; (4) and that sect. 15 of the Letters Patent is controlled by sect. 629 (now O. XLVII. r. 7) of the Code, which provides that an order of a civil Court rejecting an application for review of judgment shall be final.(5)

Appeal. An order may or may not be a decree (see sect. 2). The former are appealable as such. The latter orders may or may not be appealable under sect. 104 or O. is no law in India which renders it imperative upon a suitor to appeal from every interlocutory order by which he may conceive himself aggrieved under the penalty, if he does not do so, of forfeiting for ever the benefit of the consideration of the Appellate Court.(1) Formerly though no appeal had been filed from an order which was a preliminary decree within the period of limitation, that order might have been questioned on the appeal from the final decree.(2) This, however, is not so now; see sect. 97. In the case of orders not decrees, an order made under the Code from which an appeal is given under sect. 104 may be questioned under this section in an appeal from the decree in the suit, although no appeal from such order has been preferred under sect. 104.(3) The same rule applies where, though the order is not one of those mentioned in sect. 104, it is a judgment within the meaning of sect. 15 of the Letters Patent. The order may equally, as in the other cases, be questioned under this section.(4) It has been held that where a suit has been remanded on appeal, an appeal from the order after the suit has been taken up by the first Court on remand and finally disposed of will not lie and that this clause has no bearing on such cases.(5)

Orders of remand have now, by the second clause, been excepted. As to the previous law, see note (3), infra.

And where an order under the group of sections relating to representatives has been made excluding a person from the record, that person must seek his or her remedy in appeal against the order, and is not entitled to appeal against the decree so long as the order stands, the reason being that the question whether the order below was right or wrong goes to the very root of the question as to the party's right to be a party to the proceedings below, or to come up at all in appeal.(1) If an order is non-appealable, then it may be questioned under this section subject to the terms thereof. While sect. 104 deals with what may be styled immediate appeals from orders, this section is in substance the grant of an ultimate appeal against any order affecting the decision of the case, but making such ultimate appeal contemporaneous with an appeal against the decree.(2) It has been held that if there is an appeal against an order made under any rule, there is also an appeal against any order made under part of that rule.(3)

Order must be under this Code.—This section must be read with sect. 104, and should be construed as if the words "under this Code" were inserted between the words "by a Court" and the words "in the exercise of." To hold otherwise would have the effect of abolishing many appeals given by other Acts of the Legislature, some of which were passed before the Code came into force; for example, appeals from decisions in Companies cases.(4) So also an order for attachment for contempt is not an order in exercise of the High Court's civil jurisdiction, and therefore does not come within the provisions of this section. Contempts are in the nature of offences, and therefore under sect. 15 of the Letters Patent, 1865, an appeal lies from an order of committal for contempt.(5)

The section contemplates two things—there being a regular appeal about something else, and in that appeal the insertion in the memorandum of appeal of a ground of objection under this section.(6) This section does not enable a litigant to avoid limitation by coming up under this section when the only ground of appeal is an order made under sect. 562, now O. XLI. r. 23.(7) No appeal lies where no objection is taken to the decree as regards the merits of the case, those merits having been enquired into,(8) but the grounds are solely directed against an interlocutory order passed in the suit.(9) Where, however, the order of the lower Appellate Court as to abatement was embodied in the judgment and decree, it was held that objection thereto was properly taken by way of second appeal against the decree. In this case the Court was asked to set aside the decree on the ground that the trial on the merits was contrary to law; but even if the order that by reason of the death of one of the respondents the appeal against her failed were treated as an order in the suit separate from the findings upon which the decree was based (which it was held not to be), then there was an objection that the appeal ought to have abated altogether and not partially.(1)

Order.—The words "prior to decree" which appeared in sect. 363 of the Code of 1859, were omitted from the Code of 1877, as from the last and present Code, and thus the section is applicable to orders affecting the decision of the case whether such orders were made before or after the decree.(2) The words "affecting the decision of the case" did not apply to "such orders" in the former section, but to the previous words "error, defect or irregularity." So in an appeal from an ex parte decree in a summary suit upon a promissory note, it was held that an appeal lay from an order made after decree under sect. 534 (now O. XXXVII. r. 4), refusing to set aside the ex parte decree.(3) The Court also observed that if the Court made an order to set aside the decree, stay execution, and give leave to the defendant to appear and defend, it "affects the decision," and by refusing to do so it also "affects the decision" inasmuch as it thereby upholds the decree against the party applying to have it set aside.(4) The word "such" has now been deleted. The order must be one passed under the Code. A decision under sect. 5 of the Court Fees Act is not an order under this section.(5)

Decree.—The section only applies where there is an appeal from a "decree." As to the meaning of this term, see notes under sect. 2, ante. Where the order appealed from was not a decree nor an order under sect. 588 of the former Code, it was held no appeal lay.(6)

Error, defect, or irregularity.—These words mean in this section error, defect, or irregularity in procedure or in law, and not in matters of fact.(7)

"Affecting the decision of the case."—These words mean "affecting the decision of the case with reference to the merits of it." (8) Therefore, when an ex parte decree was set aside by an order under sect. 108 (now O. IX. r. 13), and the suit heard upon the merits and dismissed, it was held that such order was not an order affecting the decision of the case under this section; it did not determine on the merits, but merely insured a hearing upon the merits.(1) So an order readmitting an appeal which had been dismissed for default is not an order affecting the decision of the case,(2) nor is an order allowing a plaintiff to sue as a pauper.(3) The orders which may be considered under this section are, in short, those by which the Judge may have been misled in deciding the case.(4)

Clause (2).—See ante, notes, "Appeal."

What Courts to hear appeal.

106. Where an appeal from any order is allowed, it shall lie to the Court to which an appeal would lie from the decree in the suit in which such order was made, or where such order is made by a Court (not being a High Court) in the exercise of appellate jurisdiction, then to the High Court.

Appellate Courts.—The proviso to sect. 589, which this section replaces, has been omitted as the Code no longer deals with insolvency proceedings.

of misjoined suits; (1) sending for and examining an Ameen on his report; (2) power to award costs against the estate of a deceased plaintiff; (3) power to pass an order under sect. 108 of the last Code; (4) and the like. An Appellate Court has wider powers of remand than under the last Code.(5)

The words of the section confer and impose upon an Appellate Court very wide powers,(6) in fact, the same powers as those of the first Court as nearly as may be. It was, however, sometimes a question whether the general powers thus stated in the first part of the section were controlled by the second portion,(7) which dealt with the death, marriage and insolvency of parties. This portion has now been removed to O. XXII. r. 13, the object of which is to obviate the necessity of repeating the provisions of the order so as to make them applicable to appeals, and that order is itself stated in wider terms, being no longer limited to proceedings arising out of the death, marriage or insolvency of parties to an appeal.(8) The amended section, disencumbered of the portion referred to, should now make it clear that the powers of an Appellate Court are as nearly as may be the same as those of the first Court; that is, while they are as extensive, they are subject to the same limitations.(9) This principle has been held to be applicable to all cases where the Appellate Court has a plenary, and not merely a limited, jurisdiction.(10) The first sub-clause is new, and has been inserted because it was thought desirable to have in the body of the Code a general provision about the powers of an Appellate Court. The second sub-clause is taken from the first part of sect. 582 of the former Code.

"As far as may be."—These words mean "as far as is consistent with the principles on which appeals from appellate decrees [and orders] are admitted and determined." In second appeal the Court cannot go into the facts. So it was held that no objection could be taken under sect. 567 of the last Code.(1) corresponding with the present O. XLI. r. 27. So also sect. 565 (now r. 25 of the same Order) was held not to apply to second appeals.(2) So while sects. 562 and 564 of the last Code were held strictly binding on all Courts of first appeal, cases frequently occurred in which the Court in second appeal remanded cases for reasons not contemplated in the former section.(3) So the appellate Court has set aside a decree where there was no proper judgment and remanded the case for a decision de novo,(4) and has made a remand where evidence was improperly admitted; (5) and for a finding on an issue.(6) Where the first Court dismissed a suit on one of the issues, viz., that of title, observing that it was not necessary to decide the other issues, one of which was an issue as to limitation, and the second Court decreed the suit by reversing the finding of the first Court on the issue of title, but omitted to record a finding on the issue of limitation; the case was remanded to the Lower Appellate Court for findings on the remaining issues.(7) And though there was no section strictly authorizing a remand, the Court was held under the circumstances warranted ex debito justitiæ in setting aside the proceedings and directing a retrial of the case.(8) Sect. 587 of the last Code was held to authorize an application to bring in a plaintiff respondent in second appeals and to extend to such appeals the provisions of sects. 368 and 582 of that Code (now O. XXII. r 4, sect. 107, O. XXII. r. 11).(9) It was, however, subsequently held, though the Allahabad and Calcutta High Courts dissent, that the reference to sect. 582 in the Limitation Act did not include by implication second appeals referred to in the section corresponding to this.(10) This section may be read with sect. 582, now 107, ante, O. XXII. r. 11, post.(11)

Appeal to His Majesty in Council.—This matter is dealt with both in the above sections and in O. XLV. The provisions are substantially the same as in the last Code. Sects. 613–615 of that Code have not been re-enacted, and rr. 4 and 5 of O. XLV. are new.

In the Common Law of England must be found the origin of the jurisdiction of the Sovereign in Council, but the Statute Law has recognized and affirmed such jurisdiction. In 1726, by a charter granted by George I., an appeal lay in the case of the Mayors' Courts to the Governor or President in Council and in important cases (1) to the King in Council. The appeal to the Privy Council from the Court of Sudder Dewany Adawlut (which the High Court on its appellate side represents) was granted by 21 Geo. III. c. 70. The power to admit an appeal was first conferred upon the Sudder Dewany Adawlut by Reg. XVI. of 1797, sect. 2.(2) In 1833 the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council was created,(3) and by orders of Her Majesty in Council of the 10th April, 1838, passed in pursuance of 3 and 4 William IV. c. 41, certain restrictions were placed upon the exercise of the power of the Sudder Dewany Adawlut to admit an appeal. The practice of the Calcutta High Court in the admission of appeals has been regulated by rules of the Court made by the Sudder Dewany Adawlut on the 17th December, 1858, and by the High Court on the 30th July, 1870.(4) The Charter Act of 1861 (24 and 25 Vict. c. 104) substituted the High Courts of Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay for the Supreme Courts established under the Charters of 1774, 1800, and 1823 respectively. The Rules now in force have been issued under the powers vested in the High Court by 24 and 25 Vict. c. 104, sect. 13, by the Letters Patent of the High Court, 1865, and by the Code of Civil Procedure. These Rules came into force from 1st July, 1891.(5) The right of appeal to the King in Council now rests on clause 39 of the Letters Patent of 1865, read with sects. 109 and 110 of this Code, and O. XLV.(1) Though appeals from the High Courts in India are regulated by positive Statute, yet the Sovereign in Council possesses by virtue of the Royal Prerogative a clear appellate jurisdiction over the judgments of all Courts of Justice established in any of the British dominions beyond the seas, and notwithstanding the express statutory rights of appeal from the decisions of the High Courts, it has been repeatedly held that, notwithstanding the statutes which prescribe the time and mode of appealing, and the limits in point of amount, the power of the Sovereign in Council to entertain petitions for leave to appeal where the conditions imposed by the Statute have not been complied with, remains in full force. The jurisdiction was exercised in 1862 in an appeal from Oudh, where there was no positive Statute law, Regulation or Order in Council applicable to the admission of appeals from the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh to Her Majesty in Council.(2) Thus also it is quite discretionary with the Judicial Committee to admit an appeal in cases far below the appealable amount mentioned in the Statutes, and long after the period prescribed by the Statute for filing a petition of appeal in India has expired. Such petitions have been admitted and have led to reversal of the judgment of the Courts below. But the High Courts have no power to allow or entertain a petition for leave to appeal, or to stay execution or to take security for costs of an appeal, except strictly in accordance with the terms of the Statute or with any order the Privy Council may make in the particular case.(3) The Judicial Committee act only as advisers to the Crown and not as a Court of Judicature,(4) and "humbly recommend" their conclusions to His Majesty. But a commission appointed by the Governor General for the purpose of inquiring into the truth of an imputation against a Chief and of reporting to the Governor General in Council how far the same was true to the best of their judgment and belief, was held to be a commission appointed by the Governor General himself for the information of his own mind, in order that he should not act in his political and sovereign character otherwise than in accordance with the dictates of justice and equity, and not in any sense a Court, or if a Court not a Court from which an appeal lay to His Majesty in Council.(5) Nor is there any appeal to His Majesty in Council from the Courts of Assistant Political agents, Political agents in Kathiawar or from the decision of the Governor of Bombay in Council.(6) By the terms of the Charter (and also the Code) the appeal given is confined to Judicial acts, namely from decrees and orders, though special leave may be granted by the Privy Council.(1) Thus it has been held by the Privy Council that no appeal lies to it under the Land Acquisition Act (I. of 1894), sect. 54, since an award by the High Court under that Act is neither a decree under sect. 2 of this Code nor a decree, final judgment or order within the meaning of the Letters Patent, but is the last of a series of arbitration proceedings.(2) Where a matter has been referred by His Majesty to the Judicial Committee, which is not strictly an appealable grievance, their Lordships of the Privy Council may, under the reservations contained in 3 & 4 William IV. c. 41, advise His Majesty to grant the petitioner leave to appeal.(3) Special leave to appeal was given in a case against an order made by the Judges of the Supreme Court of Madras dismissing the Master of that Court from his office for alleged official misconduct, because the order was not made in the course of a judicial proceeding.(4) But in Ex parte Robertson (5) it was held that the Judicial Committee have no jurisdiction to take into consideration the propriety of the dismissal of a public servant, who held his office during pleasure, unless the matter is expressly referred to them by the Crown. Following this case, it has been held that the Privy Council have no jurisdiction to grant special leave to appeal against an order of the High Court at Calcutta under sect. 26, clause (2) of Beng. Reg. V. of 1831, dismissing a Munsiff for corruption in the exercise of his functions as a Judge.(6)

As stated, the King in Council, by virtue of the Royal Prerogative, possesses an appellate jurisdiction over the judgment of all Courts of Justice established in any of the British Dominions beyond the seas, and it is quite discretionary with the Judicial Committee to admit an appeal in cases far below the appealable amount mentioned in the Code, and long after the period prescribed for filing a petition of appeal in India has expired.(7) Thus, when the High Court in India has refused the necessary certificate, the aggrieved party may present a petition for the exercise of the prerogative right of the Crown to admit an appeal, and the Judicial Committee, in a fit case, will advise His Majesty that leave to appeal should be allowed on the usual terms as to security. In a fit case their lordships will advise His Majesty to grant (8) an order staying proceedings, where the High Court in India refused to make such an order on the ground that the Code gave them no jurisdiction over the subject-matter pending an appeal not certified by themselves.(9) As a rule, in cases under the appealable amount, before special leave is petitioned from His Majesty in Council an application should be made to the High Court for a certificate that the case is nevertheless a fit one for appeal.(10)

Special leave, by the Privy Council, when granted.—The Privy Council will not advise His Majesty to exercise this prerogative and to give special leave to appeal unless there is some substantial question of law of general interest involved.(1) The petition for special leave to appeal is not by way of appeal from the decision of the Court, but it is presented for an exercise of the prerogative right of the Crown to admit an appeal. Although it is not an appeal, it is perhaps a more convenient proceeding than an appeal, because the Privy Council can then grant leave on any other ground, if other ground appears for the indulgence that is sought, and if it finds that, in a case in which the appeal is claimed as of right, the Court below has refused the certificate for a reason which appears to them to be an unsound reason, then they will advise His Majesty to admit the appeal.(2) The Privy Council is not bound by the provisions of the Code. Thus where in an appeal to it by one of the defendants, it set aside a decree of the High Court and restored that of the first Court, and it appeared from the wording of the decree of the Privy Council that the defendants generally were entitled to have the benefit of the decree, held that the defendants generally were entitled to the benefit of the decree though there was no common ground such as is referred to in the Code.(3)

Special leave without requiring further security.—Where the High Court passed a separate decree on a cross-appeal, identical in terms with those of the decree passed on appeal in the same suit, and granted leave to appeal in one and refused it in the other, their lordships granted special leave without requiring further security than had already been taken by the High Court.(4)

Leave to appeal, granted without authority—special leave granted.—An objection that an appeal has come before the Judicial Committee without proper authority, viz. that the leave to appeal should not have been given, ought to be taken at the earliest moment, for the obvious reason that the great expense of preparing for the hearing is thereby saved, which is uselessly incurred if, when the objection is ultimately taken, the Privy Council feel obliged to yield to it, but it is clearly competent to the Judicial Committee to hear such an objection at any stage of the appeal, and it is not unfrequently heard when the appeal is called on and before the arguments on the merits have commenced.(5)

Special leave to appeal—contents of the petition.—Such a petition should contain a full statement of the facts and legal grounds showing that there is a substantial case on the merits, and a point of law involved, proper to be determined by the Privy Council. Thus, where the statements contained in the petition were of a too general character to enable the Privy Council to judge of the propriety of granting the special leave prayed for, their lordships ordered that the petition should be either dismissed, with liberty to present another petition, or stand over to amend the petition.(1) If a serious question of law is involved in the appeal, special leave will be granted by the Privy Council, though leave had been refused by the High Court.(2) Special leave has been refused in the following cases:—merely because the Judge had omitted to record any reason while granting a review, which he should have done; (3) and where the High Court dismissed an appeal as barred by limitation, the Judicial Committee not being satisfied that the refusal of the High Court to admit the appeal out of time was wrong.(4)

Rescission of special leave to appeal.—Where there is an omission of any material facts, whether it arises from improper intention on the part of the petitioner, or whether it arises from accident or negligence, still the effect is just the same if the Court has been induced to make an order which, if the facts were fully before it, it would not, or might not, have been induced to make.(5) So an Order in Council made upon an ex parte application granting special leave to appeal upon an allegation as to the value of the property in dispute was rescinded, where there were omissions in the petition of proceedings in the suit, which showed the true value of the property. Generally an Order in Council obtained upon an ex parte petition, which omits to state the true facts, will be discharged with costs, but if there has been laches in applying to discharge the order on the part of the respondent, no costs will be given.(6) Where special leave to appeal is granted upon a petition in which material misstatements are made, objections should be taken by the respondent by a preliminary motion to rescind the leave to appeal, or at any rate before the hearing of the appeal, when called on, has been entered on. Where it is not clear that the material misstatements in the petition had been made with an intention to deceive, and the objection to the appeal is taken at a late stage of the hearing, the Judicial Committee may decline to dismiss the appeal, but refuse the appellant the costs of the appeal. But if their Lordships are satisfied that the misstatements were intentionally made to deceive them, they will, even at a late stage, dismiss the appeal.(7)

Powers of High Court after admission.—The question has arisen and been answered affirmatively whether the High Court, after the admission of an appeal to the Privy Council, has any further authority in the suit, and competence to do any judicial act relating to it. Thus on the death of a party on the record of an appeal pending before the Privy Council, evidence must be given in the Court from which the appeal has been preferred, of the representative character of the person or persons by or against whom revivor is sought. Court below should give its own opinion as to who are the parties who should be substituted upon the record, and should make and send a certificate or statement on which their Lordships can act.(1) When only the petition for leave to appeal has been filed and before it is allowed, the High Court has jurisdiction to entertain applications relating to the appeal.(2) Further, if the appellant has taken no steps towards prosecuting the appeal, the petition of appeal may be struck off the file by the High Court.(3) The Judicial Committee have no jurisdiction to entertain any application in an appeal until the petition of appeal is lodged there, though the transcript has been registered in the Council office.(4) If after the admission of the appeal no steps are taken by the appellant within reasonable time, the Judicial Committee, upon a certificate of the Registrar of the High Court that no further proceedings have been taken after the admission of the appeal, will dismiss it.(5) It was considered that an appeal to the Privy Council having once been admitted, whether properly or erroneously, the High Court had no further jurisdiction to review its order and declare the appeal rejected.(6) But in a later case Prinsep, J., held that an order granting leave to appeal to the Privy Council was open to review.(7) And an order refusing leave to appeal to the Privy Council can be reviewed by the Court which made it.(8)

Rehearing of appeal by the Privy Council.—It is unquestionably the strict rule, and ought to be distinctly understood as such, that no cause in the Privy Council can be reheard, and that an order once made, that is a report submitted to His Majesty and adopted, by being made an Order in Council, is final, and cannot be altered. The same is the case of the judgments of the House of Lords, that is, of the Court of Parliament, or of the King in Parliament as it is sometimes expressed, the only other supreme tribunal. Whatever, therefore, has been really determined in these Courts must stand, there being no power of rehearing for the purpose of changing the judgment pronounced. Nevertheless, if by misprision in embodying the judgments, errors have been introduced, these Courts possess, by Common Law, the same power which the Courts of Record and Statute have of rectifying the mistakes which have crept in. It is impossible to doubt that the indulgence extended in such cases, is mainly owing to the natural desire prevailing to prevent irremediable injustice being done by a Court of the last resort, where by some accident, without any blame, the party has not been heard, and an order has been inadvertently made as if the party has been heard. Under the peculiar circumstances of this case their Lordships recommended the restoration of the appeal dismissed ex parte.(1) Even before report, whilst the decision of the Board is not yet res judicata, great caution has been observed in permitting the rehearing of appeals.(2) After the respondent has had notice of a pending appeal, he is not entitled to further notice that the record has been transmitted or that the appeal is set down for hearing, and he cannot ask for a rehearing of the appeal on the ground that he had no such notice.(3) The unusual indulgence of recommending a re-hearing of an appeal to His Majesty ought never to be granted except under very special circumstances, and only where the ex parte hearing has not been occasioned by any default in the party applying for a re-hearing.(4) An Order in Council rescinding a previous Order in Council, granting special leave to appeal, may be discharged and the appeal restored.(5) Also an appeal dismissed for want of prosecution (under Rule 5 of the Order in Council of 1853) has been restored on explanation of delay incurred and on conditions as to costs and security to be given in England.(6)

Appeals from decision given on second appeal.—In an appeal to the Privy Council from a decree of the High Court made on a second appeal, the hearing before their Lordships must be based upon the materials which were open to the High Court, and the findings of the Subordinate Judge on matters not involving questions of law must be taken as conclusive,(7) and in such cases the findings of fact by the first Court are binding on the Judicial Committee.(8)

Concurrent judgments on fact.—The Judicial Committee will not interfere with concurrent judgments of the Courts below on pure matters of fact,(9) unless very definite and explicit grounds for that interference are assigned,(1) and it is satisfied that there is miscarriage of justice or the violation of any principle of law or procedure.(2) But where there are concurrent findings of facts and there is no substantial question of law in issue, their Lordships, in order to see how far the Courts have concurred in their view of the facts, will examine precisely what their findings are.(3) Where the Courts in India have come to a certain conclusion on a certain issue, that is a fact which, considering the advantages the Judges in India generally possess, of forming a correct opinion of the probability of a certain transaction, and in some cases of the credit due to the witness, affords a strong presumption in favour of the correctness of their decisions, yet that circumstance does not and ought not, to relieve the Judicial Committee, the Court of last resort, from the duty of examining the whole evidence and forming for itself an opinion on the whole case.(4) But the duty of a Court of ultimate appeal is to judge from the evidence and not to infer from probabilities.(5) In a recent case where in a mortgage-deed a fictitious entry had been made (which if correct would have brought it within the jurisdiction of the Calcutta High Court), and there was no evidence that there was an error, it was held by the Privy Council that concurrent findings of error were not findings of fact, since a decision that there is no evidence to support a finding is a decision of law.(6)

The Judicial Committee has refused to depart from the rule as to concurrent findings of fact, merely because the High Court has admitted documents tendered by the appellant which the first Court had rejected.(7) It cannot detract from the weight of concurrent findings of fact, that different Courts, in arriving at the same result upon the same evidence, have not been influenced by precisely the same considerations. A difference of opinion to that extent is only calculated to suggest that the evidence, whatever view be taken of it, must necessarily lead to one and the same inference, and there will be no interference by the Privy Council in such cases.(8) Where no question of law, either as to the construction of documents or any other point, arises on the judgment of the High Court, and there are concurrent findings of the two Courts below on the oral and documentary evidence submitted to them, their Lordships will not entertain an appeal.(9) When the question is not one of construction of one or more deeds, which would be a question of law, but is
